They are just the customers we want to deal with, we will guarantee them No Middlemen shall eat the profits between them and us. We Retail all goods at Wholesale Prices, all our Teas, Coffees, Sugars, Spices, &c., are purchased direct of the Manufactures and Importers and as we sell direct to the consumers, whereas Middlemen add 50 per cent. to the cost. Some goods, say tea, the Importer sells to the Jobber at 10c per lb proit, the Jobber sells to the wholesale merchants 15c per lb profit, the wholesale merchant resells to the retail merchant at 20c per lb profit then then the retail merchant sells to the consumer at 25 to 50c per lb profit just as he gets it. All these intermediate profits we give our customers, and this is the secret of our immense tea trade. so with all goods we handle. We sell goods to save the profits of Middlemen

F. R. MYERS, General Passenger and Ticket Agen

A CHAPTER ON CORRUPTION.

Mr. Frank Smith who receives the handsome salary of $5,00 a year for doing nothing as official reporter of the House at Washington, has been proven a member of the Washington Ring. His share of the profits for the job of building a fence around the Capitol was $2000.

Perhaps nowhere in this country is skilled labor in such demand as in the District of Columbia. The investigation of the municipal government of that privileged territory is both entertaining and instructive. One case is that of three men who were employed to construct a sewer. They were skilled men and had all served apprenticeships. One was a blacksmith, a second a shoemaker and the third a bricklayer. The last named was discharged probably because his knowledge of bricklaying might help him form an estimate of what should be paid for constructing the sewer. Department clerks are favored with fat contracts, and one young man, sickled o'er with the pale cast of thought and the fear of an exposure, has gone to California to recruit his health, with an Interior Department commission in his pocket, and also the key of his safe, which is supposed to contain some very valuable and desirable papers. Sooner or later the people must come to regard our general Government at Washington as a huge leech on the country, slowly but surely bleeding to death. Every day disclosures are made which are almost sufficient to shake the faith of the loyal and true. Washington is but a nest of robbers and swindlers when Cabinet officers and Congressmen are found to be directly engaged in the perpetration of stupendous frauds upon the people, and the President not above taking gifts for services rendered, it is a time for a change of policy.

Mr. R. J. Hinton, the Secretary of the Republican National Executive Committee, has sent to the New York Tribune a long letter in reply to Commissioner Baker, in regard to a statement effecting his character. Mr. Hinton denies that he held a committee clerkship at the same time he was drawing pay from one of the departments; but he makes the following humiliating confession:

"It is true and I have so sworn, that the Republican National executive Committee caused my name to be placed on the rolls of the Census Bureau from the 19th day of June, 1871 until the 21st of May 1872, when I was transferred to the pension Bureau rolls until the 1st of April 1873—in all 21 months and 11 days—at a salary of $100 per month. It is true that this was done for political purposes and services. It is true that I never rendered services in the department or its bureaus. It is true that this could not have been done without the order of the Secretary of the interior or the consent of the Commissioners of Pensions—the same person which makes such swift haste to assail me.

That officer had to sign the rolls under which I drew this 'stipend,' and he is personally and legally responsible for such an act.

"Now, Sir, I have shown that I am not desirous of evading or avoiding any responsibility that justly belongs to me in the acceptance of such a payment. It was an abuse, and I knew it; but like many another, I chose, as it seemed to me at the time, the lesser of two evils, in order to aid in securing the triumph of the Republican party. This attack gives me a vivid personal illustration of the truth of an old axiom that one may not do evil that good may come of it. I did my best to re-elect U. S. Grant. I am not sorry for it but frankly confess to the wrong to which I was in part an accessory, but the guilt of which falls more upon my present accuser, who was never asked by me to put my name on or retain it on the rolls of the bureau over which he presides. I am willing to bear whatever blame attaches to me, if it breaks up an abuse to which all political parties have heretofore been subject."

This is truly refreshing. We begin to understand the enthusiasm with which the Great Silent Man inspires the popular heart when so good a gentleman as R. J. Hinton submits to the anguish of drawing a salary of $100 a month for 21 months and 11 days, without rendering "any service in the Department or its bureaus."

But now we come nearer home. Our own State has been polluted by a United States officer. The Fort Wayne Gazette says:

We recently published a list of fees charged by the U. S. Marshal in the bankruptcy case of M. and A. Hale, bankrupts of Waterloo, and assumed that the charges were legal, while outrageous. An examination of the law, however, has satisfied us that no such fees are contemplated, and the damaging onus falls upon the Marshal, whom we believed to be an honest, faithful and upright officer. The charges cannot, evidently, be defended and it is plain, that if this is so, general Spooner should resign at once. If they are not illegal, he can easily show the law which justifies them. We remand, therefore, the defense of the charges to General Spooner himself, and call upon him to verify them.

General Spooner puts in a bill in this case amounting to $855.91, out of which $783,49 should be deducted as illegal, unauthorized and directly in contravention of the rules of the supreme Court of the United States on the subject.

The Sentinel says:

In another column will be found a full expose of the scandalous fraud perpetrated by U S. Marshal Ben Spooner in the Halt Bankruptcy case. A charge of $717 89 is made for making 267 copies of schedules, which may cost five dollars, thus leaving a clear profit for the Marshal of $710 at least. This is but a sample of other exhorbitant charge. Whatever may be said of the law, it can be shown that its conditions have not been observed. Where papers have been sent by mail charges for mileage both ways have been made. The single item of $716.89, it has been shown is $710 too much, as the cost of making one copy will not exceed ten cents, and the others can only be charged at the cost necessary to print them. For serving an order of the court at Waterloo a charge of $15,00 is made, which is the fee $200 and mileage both ways. The trip was probably not made at all, as the papers could just as well be sent by mail. The law allows charges to be made for actual expenses only. Thus it will be see that Marshal Spooner has been feathering his official nest in a very neat and artistic manner, the while cursing the Bankrupt law as one of the greatest frauds in existence.

Let the people without regard to party look at these facts squarely in the face, and then ask whether a change is not necessary with the party in power.

A call in the form of a circular is issued to be circulated through the counties to the following effect.

To the County and District voters.

In response to the demand of the people for a reform in the conduct of public affairs, and the purification of local State and national policies, the undersigned, independent voters, invite, and exhort the people, irrespective of party, to come together in township, county and district, to select delegate representatives, who shall meet in mass convention on the 10th day of June 1874, at Indianapolis to frame such measures and select such men as shall represent their sentiments and carry out their purposes. In the selection of such delegates, it is essential that the friends of reform guard vigilantly against the intrusion of any one not known to be in cordial sympathy with the objects of this movement. The success of this popular outbreak depends upon the exclusion of the party managers and self-seeking demagogues. That such delegates be empowered and announce a platform and declaration of principles upon which all honest men may join in hearty co-operation.

A TEXAN SLAUGHTER HOUSE.

Wholesale Murder of Bovines.

From Fulton's Letter to the Baltimore American.

Our Baltimore butchers would be as much startled as I was at the wholesale process of killing carried on in the establishment. The ordinary process, drawing the steer down to the block and striking him on the head with an axe, is too slow for the wholesale butchery carried on here. About one dozen head are driven into a small pen just sufficiently large to hold that number closely packed and a gate forced to behind them. This bed has an open slat platform across the top of it, upon which two men are stationed with poles with sharp pointed knives fixed on the end of them. With a rapidity acquired by long practice, they plunge their spears into the necks of the affrighted and struggling animals, cutting the jugular vein, and each successively falls as if struck down with an axe. The blood spouts out in streams as if from a dozen fountains, and in less than a minute the whole pen full are quivering in the throes of death, and covered with blood. The door of the pen leading into the rendering room is then thrown open, the animals drawn out in succession, a knife rapidly splits the skin around the neck and down the stomach. A rope is attacked to the upper part of the hide by a clamp, to the other end of which is a mule, which leisurely walks off down the yard carrying the skin of the animal with him, and leaving the carcass still quivering with animal life. A tackle hoists the body up to a level with the mouth of one of the immense cauldrons, and in less time than it takes to describe the process, it is in the seething and boiling mass. There are four or five of these cauldrons, each large enough to hold a dozen beeves, and they are kept constantly going during the killing season. The tallow is drawn off into large hogsheads, and the remains of these great soup kettles are carried out onto what is called the "hash pile," consisting of bones, horns, and the animal matter, from which all the fatty substance has been extracted.

Farmers vs. Manufacturers.

We take the following from a new book, just issued by the National Publishing Company of Chicago, entitled "The History of the Grange Movement," by E. D. Martin, author of "Behind the Scenes in Washington."

According to the Census of 1870 there were 2,707,421 persons engaged in manufactures, mechanical and mining industries, and 5,922,471 persons engaged in agricultural pursuits. There is no means of obtaining the exact number of employers in the manufacturing class, but, making all due allowance for the great number of small establishments in the country, we may safely assert that the number of persons engaged in manufacturing operations, and employing the labor of others, is limited to a few hundred thousand, scarcely a half million in number, if so many, the remainder of the number given above being made up by the persons receiving wages and termed operatives.

Let us suppose that without the duty, English blankets could be sold in the United States for $5 a pair, and that American blankets could be sold for the same figure, with a fair profit to the manufacturer. The tariff adds a duty of 90 per cent., or $4 50 to the English article, and raises the price to $9.50 a pair. The American manufacturer is thus enabled to advance his price to $8.50, and still to undersell the English manufacturer. The people are thus compelled to pay $3.50 additional pair of American blankets they purchase. No wonder our woolen and cotton factories amass such immense fortunes.

There are but two or three manufacturers of quinine in the United States, but, as this medicine is the special antidote to the most common disease of this country, large quantities of quinine are used annually. The bark from which the powder is made is admitted free of duty, but the powder itself must pay a duty of 50 per cent. The American manufacturer is thus "protected" to an extent which enables him to demand 50 per cent. more for his quinine than he could obtain in a free market, and the excess is a burdensome tax exacted from the entire nation. The reader can easily form an idea of the amount of the annual tribute paid by the nation to the two or three manufacturers of quinine.

'They put him in a show-case,' was the remark of a rural lady who recently attended a city funeral.

No Beaureau for Blunders.

A first rate story is told of a very prominent man, who lived in Detroit forty years ago, and who at that time owned more steamboats than any other man in the West. Like many of the pioneers who acquired great riches, he was very ignorant in all that books taught, but his learning was more like wisdom. He had at the time of our story, just completed a splendid new warehouse at Buffalo, and wanting a suitable clerk to take charge of it he advertised for one in the papers. The next morning early a candidate for the position, a rather too flashy a young man in appearance, but the following conversation occurred:

"Young man, when you make a mistake in any of your books, how do you correct it?"

The young man explained in a profuse manner, how he should make it all right.

"A good way, no doubt, to do it," replied the old man, "but I shan't want you."

Very soon another aspirant put in his appearance. A similar question was asked him, and in a long and eloquent manner he pointed out the remedy in all such cases.

All the reply was, "Young man I shan't want you."

Some three or four others dropped in during the day, and to each one the same question was put, and they all had some smart way of covering up errors in their books.

The old gentleman was entirely ignorant himself of the art of bookkeeping, but he had wisdom in all things, which is often more than a match for learning. Just at the close of the day a plainly dressed man, with a bright eye and a brisk step, called for the situation.

"Take a seat sir," said the old gentleman. "I want to ask you just one question. When you make a false entry on your books, how do you go to work to correct it?"

Durning upon his questioner a cold, sharp look, the young man replied:

"I don't make those kind of mistakes, sir!"

"Ah, my dear sir, you are just the man I have been looking for all day," and, in a few moments after, the man who corected his blunders by not making them, was installed in the office.

A DRINKING SONG.

BY H. W. LONGFELLOW.

Come, old friend, sit down and listen!
  From the pitcher, placed between us,
How the waters laugh and glisten
  In the head of old Silenus.

Old Silenus, bloated, drunken,
  Led by his inebriate satyrs;
On his breast his head is sunken,
  Vacantly he leers and chatters.

Round about him fair Bacchantes,
  Bearing cymbals, flutes and thyrses,
Wild from Naxian groves, or Zante's
  Vineyards, sing delirious verses.

Thus he won, through all the nations,
  Bloodless victories, and the farmer
Bore, as trophies and oblations,
  Vines for banners, plows for armor.

Judged by no o'er zealous rigor,
  Much this mystic throng expresses;
Bacchus was the type of vigor,
  And Silenus of excesses.

These are ancient ethnic revels
  Of a faith long since forsaken;
Now the satyrs, changed to devils,
  Frighten mortals wine-o'ertaken.

Now to rivulets from the mountains
  Point the rods of fortune tellers,
Youth perpetual dwelling fountains,
  Not in flasks and casks and cellars.

Claudius, though he sang of flagons,
  And huge tankards filled with Rhenish,
From that fiery blood of dragons
  Never would his own replenish.

Even Redi, though he chanted
  Bacchus in the Tuscan valleys,
Never drank the wine he vaunted
  In his dithyrambic sallies.

Then with water fill the pitcher,
  Wreathed about with classic fables;
Ne'er Falernian threw a richer
  Light upon Lucullus' tables.

Come, old friend, sit down and listen!
  As it passes there between us,
How its wavelets laugh and glisten
  In the head of old Silenus

GOING DOWN HILL.

"That looks bad," exclaimed farmer White, with an expressive shake of the head, as he passed a neglected garden and broken-down fences, in one of his daily walks.

"Bad enough," was the reply of the companion to whom the remark was addressed. "Neighbor Thompson appears to be running down hill pretty fast. I can remember the time when everything around his place was trim and tidy."

"It is quite the contrary now," returned the farmer. "House, outbuildings, and grounds all show the want of the master's care. I am afraid Thompson is on the downward path."

"He always appeared to be a steady, industrious man," rejoined the second speaker. "I have a pair of boots on my feet at this moment, of his make, and they have done me good service."

"I have generally employed him for myself and family," was the reply, "and I must confess that he is a good workman; but nevertheless I believe I shall step into Jack Smith's this morning and order a pair of boots, of which I stand in need. I always make it a rule never to patronize those who appear to be running behindhand. There is generally some risk in helping those who do not try to help themselves."

"Very true, and as my wife desired me to see about a pair of shoes for her this morning, I will follow your example and call upon Smith. He is no great favorite of mine, however—an idle, quarrelsome fellow."

"And yet he seems to be getting ahead in the world," answered the farmer, "and I am willing to give him a lift. But I have an errand at the butcher's. Step in with me for a moment. I will not detain you."

At the butcher's they met the neighbor who had been the subject of their previous conversation. He certainly presented rather a shabby appearance, and in his choice of meat there was a regard to economy which did not escape the observation of farmer White.

After a few passing remarks, the poor shoemaker took his departure, and the butcher opened his account book with a somewhat anxious air, saying, as he charged the bit of meat:

"I believe it is time that neighbor Thompson and I came to a settlement. Short accounts make long friends."

"No time to lose, I should say," remarked the farmer.

"Indeed! Have you heard of any trouble, neighbor White?"

"No, I have heard nothing; but a man has the use of his own eyes, you know; and I never trust anyone with my money who is evidently going down hill."

"Quite right; and I will send in my bill this evening. I have only delayed on account of the sickness which the poor man has had in his family all winter. I suppose he must have run behindhand a little, but still I must take care of number one."

"Speaking of Thompson, are you?" observed a bystander, who appeared to take an interest in the conversation. "Going down hill, is he? I must look out for myself, then. He owes me quite a snug sum for leather. I did intend to give him another month's credit; but, on the whole, I guess the money would be safer in my own pocket."

Here the four worthies separated, each with his mind filled with the affairs of neighbor Thompson, the probability that he was going down hill, and the best way of giving him a push.

In another part of the little village, similar scenes were passing.

"I declare!" exclaimed Mrs. Bennett, the dressmaker, to a favorite assistant, as she hastily withdrew her head from the window whence she had been gazing on the passers-by. "If there is not Mrs. Thompson, the shoemaker's wife, coming up the steps with a parcel in her hand. She wants to engage me to do her spring work, I suppose, but I think it would be a venture. Everyone says they are running down hill, and it is a chance if I ever get my pay."

"She has always paid us promptly," was the reply.

"True, but that was in the days of prosperity. I cannot afford to run any risks."

The entrance of Mrs. Thompson prevented further conversation.

She was evidently surprised at the refusal of Mrs. Bennett to do any work for her, but as a great pressure of business was pleaded as an excuse, there was nothing to be said, and she soon took leave. Another application proved equally unsuccessful. It was strange how busy the village dressmakers had suddenly become.

On her way home, the poor shoemaker's wife met the teacher of a small school in the neighborhood, where two of her children attended.

"Ah!" Mrs. Thompson, I am glad to see you," was the salutation. "I was about calling at your house. Would it be convenient to settle our little account this afternoon?"

"Our account!" was the surprised reply. "Surely the term has not yet expired!"

"Only half of it, but my present rule is to collect my money at that time. It is a plan which many teachers have adopted of late."

"I was not aware that there had been any change in your rules, and I have made arrangements to meet the bill at the usual time. I fear it will not be in my power to do so sooner."

The countenance of the teacher showed great disappointment, and as she passed on in a different direction, she muttered to herself:

"Just as I expected. I shall never get a cent. Everybody says that they are going down hill. I must get rid of the children in some way. Perhaps I can get a pair of shoes or two for payment for the half quarter, if I manage right, but it will never do to go on in this way."

A little discomposed by her interview with the teacher, Mrs. Thompson stepped into a neighboring grocery to purchase some trifling article of family stores.

"I have a little account against you. Will it be convenient for Mr. Thompson to settle it this evening?" asked the civil shopkeeper, as he produced the desired article.

"Is it his usual time for settling?" was again the surprised inquiry.

"Well, not exactly, but money is very tight just now, and I am anxious to get in all that is due me. In future, I intend keeping short accounts. There is your little bill, if you would like to look at it. I will call around this evening. It is a small affair."

"Thirty dollars is no small sum to us just now," thought Mrs. Thompson, as she thoughtfully pursued her way toward home. "It seems strange that all these payments must be met just now, while we are struggling to recover from the heavy expenses of the winter. I cannot understand it."

Her perplexity was increased upon finding her husband with two bills in his hand, and a countenance expressive of anxiety and concern.

"Look, Mary," he said, as she entered. "Here are two unexpected calls for money—one from the doctor, and one from the dealer in leather from whom I purchased my last stock. They are both very urgent for immediate payment, although they have always been willing to wait a few months until I could make arrangements to meet their claims. But misfortunes never come singly, and if a man once gets a little behindhand, trouble seems to pour in upon him."

"Just so," replied the wife. "The neighbors think we are going down hill, and every one is ready to give us a push. Here are two more bills for you—one from the grocer and the other from the teacher."

Reply was prevented by a knock at the door, and the appearance of a lad who presented a neatly folded paper and disappeared.

"The butcher's account, as I live!" exclaimed the astonished shoemaker. "What is to be done, Mary? So much money to be paid out, and very little coming in; for some of my best customers have left me, although my work has always given satisfaction. If I could only have as much employment as usual, and the usual credit allowed me, I could soon satisfy all these claims; but to meet them now is impossible, and the acknowledgement of my inability will send us still farther on the downward path."

"We must do our best, and trust in Providence," was the consolatory remark of his wife, as a second knock at the door aroused the fear that another claimant was about to appear.

But the benevolent countenance of Uncle Joshua, a rare but ever welcome visitor, presented itself."

Seating himself in the comfortable chair which Mary hastened to hand him, he said, in his somewhat eccentric but friendly manner:

"Well, good folks, I understand that the world does not go quite as well with you as formerly. What is the trouble?"

"There need be no trouble, sir," was the reply, "if men would not try to add to the afflictions which the Almighty sees to be necessary for us. The winter was a trying one. We met with misfortunes, which we endeavored to bear with patience. All would now go well if those around me were not determined to push me on the downward path."

"But there lies the difficulty, friend Thompson. This is a selfish world. Everybody, or at least a great majority, care only for number one. If they see a poor neighbor going down hill, their first thought is whether it will affect their own interests, and provided they can secure themselves, they care not how soon he goes to the bottom. The only way is, to keep up appearances. Show no signs of going behindhand, and all will go well with you."

"Very true, Uncle Joshua, but how is this to be done? Bills which I did not expect to be called upon to meet for the next three months are pouring in upon me. My best customers are leaving me for a more fortunate rival. In short, I am on the brink of ruin, and naught save a miracle can save me."

"A miracle which is very easily wrought, then, I imagine, my good friend. What is the amount of these debts which press so heavily upon you, and how soon, in the course of events, could you discharge them?"

"They do not exceed one hundred dollars," replied the shoemaker; "and with my usual run of work, I could make all right in three or four months."

"We will say six," was the answer. "I will advance you one hundred and fifty dollars for six months. Pay every cent that you owe, and with the remainder of the money, make some slight addition or improvement in your shop or house, and put everything about the grounds in its usual neat order. Try this plan for a few weeks, and we will see what effect it has upon our worthy neighbors. No, no, never mind thanking me. I am only trying a little experiment on human nature. I know you of old, and have no doubt that my money is safe in your hands."

* * * * * * *

Weeks passed by. The advice of Uncle Joshua had been strictly followed, and the change in the shoemaker's prospects was indeed wonderful. He was now spoken of as one of the most thriving men in the village, and many marvelous stories were told to account for the sudden alteration in his affairs. It was generally agreed that a distant relative had bequeathed to him a legacy, which had entirely relieved him of his pecuniary difficulties. Old customers and new ones crowded in upon him. They had never before realized the beauty and durability of his work. The polite butcher selected the best pieces of meat for his inspection, as he entered, and was totally indifferent as to the time of payment. The dealer in leather called to inform him that his best hides awaited his orders. The teacher accompanied the children home to tea, and spoke in high terms of their improvement, pronouncing them among her best scholars. The dressmaker suddenly found herself free from the great press of work, and in a friendly note expressed her desire to oblige Mrs. Thompson in any way in her power.

"Just as I expected," exclaimed Uncle Joshua, rubbing his hands exultingly, as the grateful shoemaker called upon him at the expiration of six months, with the money which had been loaned in the hour of need. "Just as I expected. A strange world! They are ready to push a man up hill if he seems to be ascending, and just as ready to push him down if they fancy that his face is turned that way. In future, neighbor Thompson, let everything around you wear an air of prosperity, and you will be sure to prosper." And with a satisfied air, Uncle Joshua placed his money in his pocket-book, ready to meet some other claim upon his benevolence, while he whom he had thus befriended, with light steps and cheerful countenance, returned to his happy home.

A Catholic Bishop Sent to the Penitentiary.

The American Mail, of Rio de Janeiro, in its issue of the 24th of February, says:

At 10 o'clock on the morning of the 21st the trial of the Right Rev. Bishop of Pernambuco was resumed by the Supreme Tribunal. His Grace was accompanied by the Right Rev. Bishop of the city, and by his lordship the Bishop of Kansas, United States, who came to Brazil to collect donations for the poor Catholic churches of that State. The court was densely crowded with people of all classes of society, the highest spheres of the same being fully represented. The countenance of the accused, although dignified in the extreme, bore evident signs of deep sadness. The report of the Judge Relator having been read, the President addressed to His Grace the question whether anything within the document just read was incorrect? But His Grace, faithful to his original answer, "Jesus autem tacebat," did not reply to the question. A long debate then ensued about the right of the spontaneous defenders to address the court in behalf of the accused. The President, however, firmly declared that, the tribunal having already granted the right, he would sustain it, requesting, however, the spontaneous orators to be brief, on account of the lateness of the hour.

Senators Zacarias and Condido Mendes, who were allowed to defend the Bishop in the quality of spontaneous advocates, then delivered successively their defense in two most eloquent and pathetic speeches, but the doom of the poor Bishop was sealed. After the defense the court closed its doors for a secret session. At 3:40 p. m., the doors being again opened, the President proceeded to collect the votes of the Supreme Judges, which stood thus: Six condemned the Bishop to four years' imprisonment with hard labor; one to short imprisonment for the simple crime of disobedience; and one for the nullity of the whole process, or for the acquittal of the Bishop.

The Bishop of Pernambuco, therefore, by a large majority vote of the Supreme Court of Brazil, has been declared guilty of a high crime against the laws of the Empire, and condemned to the Penitentiary, with hard labor.

Destructive Powder.

Corrosive sublimate is disastrous to ants. A little of it sprinkled across one of their paths in dry weather has a most surprising effect. As soon as one of the ants touches the white powder it commences to run about wildly, and to attack any other ant it comes across. In a couple of hours round balls of the ants will be found all biting each other; and numerous individuals will be seen bitten completely in two, while others have lost some of their legs or antennæ. News of the commotion is carried to the formicarium, and huge fellows, measuring three-quarters of an inch in length, that only come out of the nest during a migration or an attack on the nest of one of the working columns, are seen stalking down with a determined air, as if they would soon right matters. As soon, however, as they have touched the sublimate all their stateliness leaves them; they rush about; their legs are seized by some of the smaller ants already affected by the poison; and they themselves begin to bite, and in a short time become the center of fresh balls of rabid ants. The sublimate can only be used effectively in dry weather.

A WOMAN BORN JULY 4, 1776.—One of the most remarkable old ladies of our times is Miss Lucy Langdon Nowell, who was born in Alfred, Me., July 4, 1776, on the day and very near the hour of the signing of the Declaration of Independence. When eight years of age she united with the Alfred Shakers, and has since lived with them. When eighty-four years of age she wove thirty-four yards of cloth, and at ninety-six knit ten pairs of mittens. She has never been in a railroad car, and is in excellent health. If she lives until 1876 a Pullman palace car will be dispatched to her native town to transport her to Boston. From thence she will be carried direct to the Quaker City, where her presence will be one of the features of the grand Centennial.

The Evils of Lynch Law.

The telegraph has already related how a dying man in Colorado recently confessed that he alone was guilty of outraging and murdering a young girl in Ohio, for which crime two innocent men were lynched by the incensed citizens. The particulars of the case are thus given by the Indianapolis Journal:

"In June, 1872, a young girl named Mary Bell Secor, while on her way through the woods to the house of her sister, in Mercer county, Ohio, near the Indiana State line, on a Saturday morning was assaulted, outraged and murdered. The discovery of the crime caused great excitement in the neighborhood, and, suspicion resting upon two men named McLeod and Kimball, and a young brother of the latter, the exasperated people, despite their protestations of innocence, wrought summary vengeance upon them by hanging McLeod and the elder Kimball—the boy being spared through the intercession of a brother of the murdered girl—to a tree in the vicinity of the spot where the crime had been committed. The general belief was that the men were guilty, and though the better class of the community deplored the resort to mob law, there were but few who did not believe the fate which had overtaken the men was just. A few days ago a man named Thomas Bradwell Douglass, a former resident of Mercer county, who removed to Colorado for the benefit of his health, which had been undermined by consumption, died at Denver. Half an hour before his death he became greatly agitated, and insisted upon the attendance of a Catholic priest. To the priest who came in answer to his summons, the dying man dictated the following confession:

In this, my dying hour, and in the full hope that by doing so I will secure absolution from my sins, I make free and full confession of a deed that has weighed upon my mind like a death-pall from the day of its commission. I am the guilty wretch who outraged and murdered the girl Secor, near Celina, Ohio, in the summer of 1872. Heaven alone knows what hellish motive prompted me to do the deed, but at the time my brain was on fire from drink, and I was veritably a madman, past the power to control my actions. The hanging of the two men, McLeod and Kimball, was as vile a murder as was ever perpetrated. I was one of the mob that executed them. I urged them on to it, for I felt it necessary to secure my own safety. I now know and feel that in acting as I did throughout this horrible affair I committed sins of a most grievous character. I hope God will pardon me, and that the publication of this statement will relieve the families of the men, McLeod and Kimball, from the stigma of dishonor resting upon them. I feel that I have but a few more moments to live, and with my last breath I avow the truth of all statements herein related.

His
mark

To the confession is appended a note signed by the priest, attesting that the confession was written by him at the request of the dying man.

Stanley on Livingstone.

Mr. Stanley has written to the London Daily News a long communication in regard to the death of Livingstone, in which he says:

"'It will come out right at last!' he was accustomed to say to me continually when any reference was made to his returning home. By this faith he breathed into me the strong hope that he would live to return, until I became also firm in the belief that he was destined to receive the laurels the Christian world was ready to shower upon him in person.

"It is now asked what he has done since he left England in 1866, and whether all he has done will ever be made known, and how much of the knowledge thought to be gained by his labor is lost? To the first question I would answer that a short resume of his discoveries, such as he gave me, and such as I obtained from the study of his map, has been already published. To the second question I would answer that a copious record of his discoveries, extending over a period of six years, which I brought to England on the 2d of August, 1872, is safe in the hands of Miss Agnes Livingstone, his eldest daughter. This record begins from the day he left Zanzibar in December, 1866, to the 13th of March, 1871. It embraces his discoveries from the mouth of the Rovuma river on the east coast of Africa to the Nyassa Lake, those made from the Nyassa Lake in the new lands west of Nyassa, in the districts of the Ma-Zitu, the Bobisa, Bobemba, the Wa Marungu-Cazembe Rua, Manyuema, Waguhhah, up to Ujiji, where he arrived on the 23d of October, 1871. It also contains his discoveries made while he journeyed with me, from about the middle of November, 1871, to the 16th of February, 1872, when we arrived at Unyanyembe.

"To ordinary readers all this may appear very vague, but if I tell them that Livingstone has tramped a distance of 8,300 miles afoot in that period they may have a conception of the value of the journal which now lies in the strong room of a Glasgow bank, and which was sealed by me on the 13th of March, 1871. They will be prepared to appreciate the treasure which must now, according to Livingstone's instructions, see the light; they will be able to judge for themselves what Livingstone has done; of the length of the journey the brave heart accomplished."

Christianity.

A valuable table of the statistics of Christianity is presented in Prof. A. J. Schem's "Statistics of the World," for 1873, just published in New York and London. In North and South America, out of a population of 84,500,000, 47,000,000 are Roman Catholics, and 30,000,000 Protestants. In Europe, out of a population of 301,000,000, 147,000,000 are Roman Catholics, 71,800,000 Protestants, and 70,200,000 adherents of the Greek Church. In Asia, out of a population of 794,000,000, 4,700,000 are Roman Catholics, 1,800,000 Protestants, and 8,500,000 adherents of the Eastern Churches. In Africa, out of a population of 192,500,000, 1,100,000 are Roman Catholics, 1,200,000 Protestants, and 3,200,000 adherents of the Eastern Churches. In Australia and Polynesia, out of a population of 4,400,000, 400,000 are Roman Catholics and 1,500,000 Protestants.

A WORD IN SEASON.—Health is a blessing which comparatively few enjoy in all its fullness. Those endowed by nature with robust frames and vigorous constitutions should be careful not to trifle with them.

When we enter the seasons of periodic fevers, the increased heat of the sun develops a miasma which pervades the air. The evil is inextinguishable; our duty to guard against it is imperative! Fortunately for those whose lot is cast in low marshy districts or new clearings, nature provides a cure and preventive. DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA VINEGAR BITTERS are endowed with rare prophylactic or disease-preventing powers, and, as "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure," should be taken in the full vigor of health, so as to fortify the system against the assault of summer disease, and thus secure by their life-giving, strengthening, restorative, and antiseptic virtues, a defense against atmospheric poison. 38

A WONDER TO HERSELF.

TANKTOWN, Delaware Co., O., March 20, 1873.
TO DR. R. V. PIERCE:

Your Discovery needs only a fair trial and it will do all you recommend it to do and more too. When I was fifteen I caught cold and for twenty-eight years I have been a perfect wreck of disease, and all the medicines and doctors' bills have run up at times to two and three hundred dollars, and never any better, but worse, when I gave up all hope last spring of living the summer through. I received one of your Account Books, and told my husband after reading it that it was too late to try further, but he said it was never too late. He went and bought two bottles and I found it was helping me very much. Since 1841 I was troubled with Catarrh and Sore Throat, and was almost entirely deaf in one ear, and my voice was as dull as could be. There was constant pain in my head. Now my head is as sound as a dollar, my voice is clear, and I have used ten bottles of your Discovery. It has cured me of Catarrh, Sore Throat, Heart Disease, Spine Affection and Torpid Liver. My Liver was very bad. My skin was rough. When I put my hand on my body it was like fish scales. Now it is as smooth and soft as a child's. In conclusion I will say I have been well for three months. I am a wonder to myself and friends. This is but an imperfect statement; half has not been told. Yours with respect, HESTER LACKEY.

WISHART'S
PINE TREE TAR CORDIAL
Nature's Great Remedy
FOR ALL
THROAT AND LUNG DISEASES!!
It is the vital principle of the Pine Tree, obtained by a peculiar process in the distillation of the tar, by which its highest medicinal properties are retained. Tar even in its crude state has been recommended by eminent physicians of every school. It is confidently offered to the afflicted for the following simple reasons:
1. IT CURES,—not by abruptly stopping the cough—but by dissolving the phlegm and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter causing the irritation. In cases of seated CONSUMPTION it both prolongs and renders less burdensome the life of the afflicted sufferer.
2. Its healing principle acts upon the irritated surface of the lungs, penetrating to each diseased part, relieving pain, and subduing inflammation.
3. IT PURIFIES AND ENRICHES THE BLOOD. Positively curing all humors, from the common PIMPLE or ERUPTION to the severest cases of Scrofula. Thousands of affidavits could be produced from those who have felt the beneficial effects of PINE TREE TAR CORDIAL in the various diseases arising from IMPURITIES OF THE BLOOD.

FARM AND HOME.

Agricultural Notes.

HILLING POTATOES.—A correspondent of the Rural New Yorker tried an experiment last season with raising potatoes by hilling and by leaving the surface flat. The summer was wet, giving the hilling the advantage, if any. The result was about the same quantity for each, but the potatoes from the part not hilled were larger, fewer in number, and finer in quality. He thinks much labor, worse than useless, is expended in hilling potatoes.

BARN ROOFS.—The Mirror and Farmer says: As you begin putting in your new hay, see to your barn roofs. On some of them the shingles are worn out, and only an entire new set will meet the emergency. On others there is a vacant place here and there, from which the wind has torn a shingle or two; these may be patched. Whatever the condition of your finances or grass crop, you cannot afford to put off any needed repairs upon your [illegible]. Better [illegible] grass rot in the field than to put it into your barn to be spoiled by the rain that will find its way through a leaky roof. Though all other buildings go to the dogs, keep your barn roofs water-proof.

TWO CROPS A YEAR.—Such a thing as two crops of grain in one year is by no means rare in California. Apple trees have been known to yield two crops and pear trees three crops; but such a phenomenon as that related in the subjoined item from an Alameda paper will be likely to create surprise: A sixty-acre field on the ranche of Juan Peralta, near San Leandoe, was farmed to barley last year, and a good heavy crop of the grain harvested from it. This year it was allowed to volunteer, and it has produced a heavy growth of clear oats, which now stand about three feet high, and is in a very thrifty condition.

WASTE LANDS.—The reclamation of land and utilizing it, thus making waste places productive, is one of the economical modes a farmer has of reducing the proportion of his taxes to production. Thousands of acres of most productive lands lie idle, and taxes are paid on them in almost every State, the net product resulting from the reclamation of which would pay the entire taxes of the farmer. Often the best lands on the farm are thus wasted—worse than wasted—for the want of a little vim and enterprise on the part of the owner. It should be a rule with all farmers not to own an acre of ground that does not pay them a profit (either by production or appreciation in value) on its assessed valuation. No business man can afford to keep such land if he has active and profitable use for his capital.

CUT-WORMS.—The New York Times says: We have succeeded in greatly reducing the numbers of this pest by enticing a flock of poultry into the field while it was being plowed. The fowls followed the plow closely, picking up every cut-worm exposed and searching every furrow for more. There is no other way of ridding the fields of these vermin but by encouraging their natural enemies. These are crows and blackbirds, which devour the grubs, and skunks and moles, which devour both the grubs and the beetles, of which they are the larvæ. While these creatures are killed or driven off, we shall suffer from the depredations of the insects which are their natural prey. To prevent the destruction of the young corn by the cut-worms, to some extent, the seed should be rolled in common pine tar and then dried in plaster before it is sown.

OATS.—The time for sowing oats is at hand, and our experience and observations teach us that the earlier this can be done the better, and we advise the farmers to have everything in readiness, good, clean seed prepared, plows and harrows sharpened, and, at the very first time the ground is in order to work, break the ground and sow the oats. We have tried several ways of putting in oats, such as first sowing the oats on the ground and covering with a breaking plow, turning a shallow furrow, and afterward harrowing to level the ground, also plowing them in with double shovels; but we are inclined to think we get best results from breaking the ground; and as fast as we get land broken, sowing the oats on the fresh turned soil, and brushing in with a heavy brush cut from the woods, or, where this could not be had, use the harrow.

Useful Recipes.

GOLDEN SALVE.—Two quarts raw linseed oil, three pounds good rosin, three pounds of beeswax. Melt thoroughly together and turn into tin boxes. This is the best salve known for burns, scalds, flesh wounds, old sores, piles, etc. To make small quantities the same proportion as above required.

CURE FOR HEADACHE.—Castor oil, one once; tincture of opium, one ounce, and tincture of capsium, one ounce. These tinctures must be made of pure alcohol. Rub well two or three times on the head, and take internally from five to twenty drops, according to the necessity of the case.

REMEDY FOR CROUP.—This remedy is simply alum: Take a knife or grater and shave or grate off in small particles about a tablespoonful of alum, mix it with about twice the quantity of sugar or honey or make it palatable, and administer as quickly as possible. The doses should be separated at intervals of fifteen minutes, until the phlegm is cut and cast off. This will give almost immediate relief. The patient should also bathe his feet in hot water and apply cloths wet in cold water to the throat and chest, changing as often as they get warm.

VINEGAR CANDY.—One cup white sugar; one-half cup vinegar; boil till it crisps in cold water. This makes an excellent candy, and something beneficial also, as it is good for colds. If the vinegar be very strong, take a little less of it, and some water, but for us the strength of the vinegar never hurts. When done pour out on buttered plates, and either mark off in squares an inch or two wide as it cools, or else, when cool enough to handle, draw it until it is nice and white; then cut it into sticks.

CHOCOLATE CARAMELS.—One pint new milk, one cake chocolate (one-quarter pound); one cup and a half sugar (white). Try this on a buttered plate, as it will not crisp in water, and when done pour on buttered pans and mark off in squares with a knife as it cools, and then it will easily break when cold. They are very excellent.

SUGARED POP CORN.—This delights all children, and is within the reach of everyone. One cup sugar (white); half cup water; boil till it taffies, then sprinkle in the pop corn, as much as the pan will hold. If nicely popped, this will sugar two quarts of corn. Stir well, so that it does not stick together; the grains ought to separate. To make pop corn balls, take the receipt for "mossies," and boil it till it taffies, then stir in your corn and set it from the fire, and as it cools work it into balls with your hands. Of course they are not like those you buy in the cities, but for homemade they are excellent.

Bald Mountain—An Indian Legend.

[Richmond (Va.) Cor. New York Times.]

The Bald mountain volcano of North Carolina has been regarded as a third-rate hoax here from the publication of the first sensational rumors in regard to it. The truth is, doubtless, that this new sensation is but the revival of an old tradition, derived from the Indians, that Bald mountain was once, in very remote times, a volcano, and hence that absence of vegetation which has given it its name.

The Indian legend is to the effect that a certain tribe living at the foot of Bald mountain was annually afflicted by the visit of a huge bird of prey, that made his eyrie on the summit of the mountain, and that on every visit seized and carried away with him a child of the tribe. This annual affliction had been undergone for a long series of years, when a great chief and medicine-man arose, and, just before the time for the next annual visit of the bird, began to preach a crusade against the common enemy. He adjured the warriors, as they were brave men and loving fathers, no longer to submit to the depredations of the bird, but to march against him and destroy him or be destroyed.

Thus aroused, the men of the tribe swore to follow the chief in the desperate venture, and, placing their squaws and children in a place of safety, they encircled the base of the mountain and began the ascent, resolved to kill the bird at all hazards and at every cost. The mountain was then clothed in rank vegetation—mighty forest trees thickly undergrown by a tangled wilderness, that made the progress upward very painful and difficult. But the determined tribe persevered, until, nearing the top of the mountain, what was their horror to perceive that it was not merely one tremendous bird they had to encounter and destroy, but a countless number of the fierce creatures, clustering in ferocious masses all over the higher portions of the mountain.

At this despair overcame them, for they at once recognized how impossible it would be for them to overcome and exterminate so many of the winged monsters, and they threw themselves down upon their faces, expecting the birds to rush down upon them and destroy them. At this moment their leader raised high his voice to the Great Spirit for their deliverance, and in answer to his prayer vivid lightnings sprang from every quarter of the cloudless sky, with a sound of thunder, slaying the birds to the last one, riving the forset trees, and wrapping the whole mountain-top in flames that soon swept from it every trace of vegetation. Thus were the monstrous birds of prey destroyed, the mountain made bald and the tribe delivered. The anniversary of the deliverance was perpetually celebrated by the tribe, and the tradition I have just related handed down from one generation to another.

In this tradition lurks the true story, doubtless, of either the original formation of the ridge known as the Bald mountains, or of an eruption which occurred many ages ago.

A Valuable Canvasser

Probably the noble and manly art of advertising was never more beautifully illustrated than at a recent wedding in San Francisco. The bridegroom was a forty-niner, the bride a belle; the creme de la creme had graced the ceremony with their presence, and the holy man had pronounced them husband and wife, when suddenly there arose a dismal, gaunt, and melancholy man in a center pew, who approached the bridegroom, and, tapping him on the shoulder, said, "I wish to talk with you a moment privately, sir." Now rumor had been busy about the forty-niner, and there were not wanting those who hinted that in the far-away distance, in those States which he had left, he had also forsaken a state of matrimony with two children. Pale grew the cheek of the newly-married man, ruffled were the plumes of the agitated bride. "A moment will suffice," said the funereal-looking person; "please step into this pew." "Well, sir," said the deeply-mystified martyr. "When a man gets married," retorted the dismal gentleman, "it is necessary for him to look with prudence for the future, and he cannot begin too soon. Now sir, a lot in the Oakdale Cemetery, which association I repres"— But the sentence died away among the sacred aisles, and the kicks of the forty-niner resounded above the shrieks of lovely maidenhood. We have merely to remark that insurance companies should lose no time in securing the services of that man. Such a canvasser only blooms, like the American aloe, once in a hundred years.

Money in Great Britain.

Mr. Ernst Seyd, a London banker, writes to the London Times to correct the estimates of the United States Bureau of Statistics as to the amount of money circulated in the United Kingdom. His corrections are two. He maintains that the gold coin in use is much greater and the paper money in circulation much smaller in amount than has been stated. Instead of £85,000,000, he claims that there is a sum of at least £105,000,000 in gold coin, and he further estimates the silver and copper coinage at £18,000,000, instead of £16,000,000. But the bank issues were also greatly overstated. By the last return there was but £38,500,000 of paper money in the Kingdom. The total active circulation is set down as £161,000,000, which is almost £20,000,000 greater than had been estimated by our Bureau of Statistics.

Street Scenes in Paris.

The street scenes constantly forced upon our observation in Paris, says a correspondent, are very amusing to a foreigner. Men and women, harnessed by leather straps into capacious hand-carts, transport heavy loads with apparent ease. Jackasses, with ears of such fabulous length, are driven in small herds from door to door, where they are milked, and the product served to invalid customers. The prevalence of wooden shoes, worn by the humbler classes, creates a perfect din and clatter upon the sidewalks and roadways, while these pedal attachments bear a goodly proportion in size and form to a Swampscott fishing skiff. The uncovered heads of men, women and children of the working classes, except, perhaps, a linen cap upon the more pretentious middle-aged woman, is a marked feature. The wonderful harness upon the common horses, heavy beyond all reason, with collars partly of wood, and of such enormous size as to overshadow the animal itself, are remarkable to one who has an eye for the eternal fitness of things. The marvelous burdens borne by men and women upon their heads is also a constant source of astonishment. Then there is the army of chiffonniers who perambulate the street gutters in the morning, and who again make their appearance, armed with lanterns, at night, to ply their humble calling. Add also the amusing cries of itinerant tradesmen, prepared to serve you in various domestic matters, and all forms a panorama of curious and busy life, extremely picturesque.

Decadence of New Orleans.

One of the oldest merchants of New Orleans, in a recent letter to a correspondent in Boston, says the population of New Orleans has fallen off in two years 30,000, and there are no less than 6,000 houses and stores at present unoccupied. Fifteen years ago New Orleans was at the acme of its wealth, prosperity and commercial importance, second only to New York and Boston. Its river and ocean tonnage in port, loading and discharging, was seldom less than 150,000 tons, and in the busiest season of the year double that amount.

VINEGAR BITTERS OR PURELY VEGETABLE FREE FROM ALCOHOL DR WALKER'S CALIFORNIA VINEGAR BITTERS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelminitics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

SENATOR ELECTED.

At last Massachusetts has elected a successor to the late Senator Sumner, and as is generally the case, the poorest timber was selected, Adams, Curtis, Banks, were all superior to Washburn. On the 32d ballot the whole number of votes was 267; necessary for a choice 134; William B. Washburn, 151; Curtis, 64; Dawes, 26; Adams, 15; Loring, 4; Banks, 4; Wendell Phillips, 1; Stephen N. Gifford, 1; John G. Whittier, 1. The president stated that "it appears that William B. Washburn is chosen senator," and declared the convention adjourned.

FOR CONGRESS.

We understand that Hon. Allen Zollars of Fort Wayne will be a candidate for Congress from the Fort Wayne District. We have had a long acquaintance with him, an know him to be an honorable, upright and intelligent gentleman, qualified in every respect for the exalted position. He is an able and successful lawyer, and a ready and eloquent debater, and of irreproachable private character. He has been a member of the Legislature from his county, and took an active and leading part in that body in 1868-9, and as a Legislator and Democrat has no objectionable record. His speech on the bill to tax bank stock for city purposes will be recollected by those who heard and read it as one of the ablest made in the House. The measure then advocated was afterwards incorporated into the State platform. After looking the field carefully over, we cannot see how a better selection can be made. There will be those before the convention, who do not stand above par for honesty and integrity, men who stop at nohing to gain their point, and would make a sorry fight among Credit Mobiliers, and Salary-grabbers. We are firmly of the opinion that Mr. Zollars would make an intelligent and honest representative and these are the kind we want in Congress. While we are outside the district we have an interest in common with the whole State to see that honest men are sent from our great State, and looking the field carefully over, none stand so prominently before the public in this respect as Mr. Zollars. We hope to see him nominated.

There seems to be some question as to the genuineness of the Farmers call we gave in part last week. The Indianapolis Sentinel says:

"The call for an independent convention, resolved upon by the farmers was brought to the Sentinel for publication by one of the highest officers in the agricultural societies of the State. Its printing was requested by a delegation composed of the most trusted members of the Grange. The calls were first submitted to the members in informal discussion, and brought to the Sentinel to be stricken off as circulars, to be sent out to the State. Hundreds of these were taken home by the returning farmers, and the evidence of their work will soon attest the unanimity of their feelings in the matter. Beyond the receiving and publishing the Sentinel had no part in the Farmers' proceedings, and distinctly disavows the part of organ in any party.

Nothing so frights the souls of fearful office-holders as to hear that people who are neither office-holders nor office-seekers, are beginning to think and act independent of the disinterested advice of their dear, devoted servants. It indicates a disposition on the part of the masters to require the servants to know their own place.

Major Sayler left for Washington City on Friday night. The Major expresses a distaste for public duties, and a preference for the practice of his profession. He will decline a renomination.—Huntington Democrat.

We are glad to know that the Major declines, not but that he could have the office again for the mere asking, but, we admire those who can decline under such circumstances.

Colfax has published a letter, announcing his determination to remain in private life and refusing to be considered in the list of candidates for Congress from his district.

A PHASE OF THE GRANGER MOVEMENT.

The grange movement is emancipating the agricultural class from a nonreflective condition to a state of intellectual activity. It is making a class to have not hitherto done much of the speaking or writing of the country enter the arena of literature, science, political economy and parliamentary rules. A granger, writing of the advance of the order, says:

"When the plow manufacturers combined to raise the price of their plows, and said they would not sell them only through their regularly established 'middlemen,' the farmers by a concert of action in their organization, sent back word, 'keep your plows and eat them, and we will keep our produce and eat it, and see who will live the longest.' It broke the combination, and instead of paying $18 for plow we are getting them for $12 and $12.50; and the mechanic whose labor builds the plow, gets quite as much as formerly; so the ring of thieves is the only loser. Not only are the men of the order learning all these things and many more to their advantage, but women are learning the same and learning to vote. By the side of their fathers, brothers, husbands and lovers they go to the grange, take part in the exercises, vote, hold office, and it has never been hinted, as yet, that any had become 'unsexed' by so doing. And thousands who have denied that they wanted to vote, and who have been ready to say, 'I would not vote if I had the opportunity,' take the ballots and deposit them with as much eagerness and interest as though it was entirely within 'their sphere.'"

The Chicago Times can hardly be charged with a partiality for the Democratic party. It is in fact quite a favorite with our Radical neighbors. When it is compelled to tell the truth it performs the task with rigor. Read and ponder over the following:

"The eruptions of the Credit-Mobilier plundering, the Congressional bribery, the Jayne piracy, the Sanborn blackmailing, The District of Columbia plundering, the Indian swindling, the Freedman's Bureau swindling, the mail-contract, the steamship-subsidy swindling, the gigantic schemes of peculation, theft and plunder, so numerous that no man can memorize the list, have been exposed because concealment of villainies so colossal was no longer possible. But what has "the party" done with its exposed scoundrels? It has honored the bribe-taker Bingham with a foreign mission. It has rewarded the rascal Casey with a custom-house reappointment. It has kept the liar and rogue Richardson at the head of the national treasury. It has honored the ballot-box corrupter Harlan with its confidence and approval. It has used the power of the standing army to protect the corrupt scoundrels, Durell, Kellogg & Co., in the offices they have usurped. It has admitted the scamp J. J. Patterson to a seat in the national senate. It has studiously and persistently defended the bribe-taker Colfax, and even offered to honor him with a nomination for Congress. It has dismissed its proceedings against every revenue collecting thief ever taken in the act of stealing. It has "white-washed" every office-holding scoundrel that has not rewarded with appointment to some higher place of trust and profit. And it has punished not one corrupt scoundrel who promised to help the party, but every decent official that refused to wink at villainy.

This is the damnable record it has made—a record which language is inadequate to express in the fullness of its damnableness; but a record which this most corrupt of all corrupt political parties that this age is known is daily enlarging."

Hicksville Hilarious.

Correspondence Fort Wayne Sentinel.

HICKSVILLE, O., March 16.—Our village, which, as you know is surrounded by a rich and productive country, has the prospect of becoming a large and flourishing town. We have long enjoyed a special advantage and a great blessing in our numerous artesian wells, that supply us with an abundance of pure and wholesome water. And we can now look forward to a still greater advantage in the early completion of the Baltimore and Ohio Railway through our place to Chicago. The company are pushing their work with the greatest activity. Through their indefatigable agent and engineer, Col. S. R. Johnston, they have made an arrangement with Judge Patton, under which they have erected their own saw mill on his property with the privilege of making all the cross ties they get on 1,280 acres of his timber lands. The mill is one of great power, worked by trained hands, and can make upon an average 500 ties per day. The company will obtain from this source from 50,000 to 100,000 ties—enough, with what they get from other parties in this vicinity, to supply the the road with ties from here to a point beyond Albion, and also fence boards enough to fence the road for a long distance.

This extensive mill gives employment to a large number of hands. Our fellow citizens, after a long winter of bad roads, bad weather and stagnation in business, are rejoicing in the advent of lively times. They go into the work with spirit and activity, because they can now look, not to rascally contractors, but to the company direct, for their pay—a company which has ample means, and, amongst all intelligent men, higher credit than perhaps any railroad company in the world.

The Adrian Press, a Republican paper, in speaking of the Connecticut election says:

Butlerism, Grantism, Salary Grabs, Credit Mobilier swindles, and moity frauds are getting to be too heavy for the Republican party to carry, and make it too obnoxious for the people to sustain.

Pioneer Sketches

—OF—

DeKALB COUNTY

NUMBER EIGHT.

When he was elected, he dryly remarked that they were using up the buckeye timber first, and reserving that of a superior quality. This, however, was only his opinion, and, as he had not yet taken his seat on the bench, it did not amount to law.

It is said that when called to his seat beside the president Judge, Hon. Charles Ewing, he was dressed in his coarse hunting shirt, and fox skin cap, and seemed much embarrassed in his new position. No doubt he would have felt more at home with his rifle on his shoulder, after a good fat "buck." He made a good Judge however, as did his associate, Judge Waldon.

We would feel that we were derelict to duty, not to mention a few more of the early settlers along the river. As for instance, Solomon DeLong and Daniel Strong, of Newville, who have each filled the office of County Commissioners; H. Fusselman, one of the first Justices of Stafford; Christian and Samuel Wanemaker, who have also filled offices in the same Township; Lott Herrick, of Concord the first Probate Judge of the county. Joseph E. Sawtell, the bland and polite salesman, who was, no doubt, the second man to sell goods along the river, and in the county; Rev. N. L. Thomas the first one to open store in Newville; Geo. Barney, one of the first Justices for Concord, James Hadsell, one of the earliest and most useful pioneers of Concord, who has filled several responsible offices; Cornelius Woodcox one of the first supervisors for DeKalb township, when it embraced three Congressional townships, and but two road districts; and especially R. J. Dawson, who has since filled so prominent a place in public affairs.—But space would fail us to speak of all, so we must close the list, though many respected pioneers are still unmentioned.

I remember clear away back beyond "the flood," shall I tell you something about that memoriable event? Well I will. Many of the first settlers along the river built their cabins on the bottoms, on account of the rich deep soil, so inviting for corn and potatoes. Now it happened that St. Jo., notwithstanding his saintship, had a naughty trick of "getting high" occasionally, and, on such occasions took a regular "spree;"—transcending all bounds of propriety, and scattering and destroying things in general. It was in the winter of 1838, about the first of January when we were dwelling securely in the neighborhood of this mild looking, that he unexpectedly "imbibed" too largely, "got high," and advanced upon us, raging and foaming terribly, without any provocation whatever. But, lest we should be guilty of what Dr. Clark calls making a figure go "all fours," we will drop it and say that the river rose until it overflowed it's banks, and surrounded the house. This allarmed us some, but it seemed to be nearly at a stand, and we hoped that it would soon retreat. But instead of falling, it continued to rise, until the loose floor began to float. We then raised the floor about six inches, being sure that the water would rise no more. We were doomed, however to be again disappointed. The water still rose. Being mid-winter we had all our firewood to "boat" in, with the canoe, which we kept cabled at the cabin, and we managed still to keep a fire above the water. The night after raising the floor, we retired to rest, and the next morning found the floor all afloat again. So we concluded to embark for safer quarters. Running the canoe into the door, we took the passengers from the bed, and packing every thing that the water could injure above its reach, we crossed the raging river, to sojourn with friends till "after the flood." The water rose until it was two and a half feet deep in the cabin, and then began to subside. Just then a severe freeze set in, leaving the entire bottoms covered with a sheet of thick ice. When the river got within its banks again we returned, threw out the ice, and took up our residence in the cabin. Other settlers, besides us suffered from this saintly freak but we have not the particulars.

Conundrum.—Why is the writer of these sketches, like the High Priest, the ceptain of the temple, and the chief priests mentioned, Acts 5-24? Because he has to do with Peter and John, Eh! No, you have missed it certainly. Do you give it up? Well, it is because he "doubts whereunto this thing will grow." We thought our last chapter would close the recount with the river settlements, but we have some "yarns" that we wish still to weave into the web of our story, as they are too interesting to be lost.

We have learned, since writing our last chapter, that Colin Robinson and his brother, Henry, came to their half brothers, (Mr. Gavin Hamiltons,) on the Maumee, to where William Rogers then lived a little below where the village of Antwerp now stands.

Musical.—Miss Gertie Doudes, our excellent music teacher will be absent from Auburn until next week, when she will return and open a class for instruction in instrumental music. Waterloo Items—The fair is to be held this year from Oct. 6th to the 9th.... Three cases of selling liquor, brought against Darby & Boyer were tried last week. Darby was acquitted, and Boyer and Campbell fined $10 each....Judge Best has been elected one of the Trustees of the Fort Wayne College.....R. Ves. McBride has been appointed school trustee, vice Charles Basset.

It is realy astonising to see the number of houses going up over town. Three new houses are to be built in the length of one square on VanBuren street. Dick Elson is to erect a new house on the old Palmer property, north part, and E. Kuhlman one on the south lot. Ensley's addition is receiving several new houses, but a much greater number would be built if he would be more liberal in the sale of his lots.

E. Vordermark & Sons want all temperance people to come and buy boots and shoes of them; also all Grangers, Republicans, Democrats and Liberals; also ministers, doctors, lawyers, editors, merchants mechanics, manufacturers and laborers: male and female, adults and children: everybody, high and low, rich and poor, great or small, can find what they want at Vordermark's, at reasonable figures. In Odd Fellows building.

Rockhill & Jenkinson have established themselves in the tobacco trade in the Walke block, Fort Wayne, and are now manufacturing a superior article of fine cut tobaccos, keeping an extensive stock of cigars, plug tobaccos, &c. They are both clever young gentlemen, and are giving great satisfaction in their dealings with the trade. Those of our merchants who deal in the article should give them a call.

All canned fruits reduced 5 cents on the can at Beards popular grocery, in Ensley block.

That Bond Case.

The immaculate and highly responsible editor of the Press has one particular item that he dishes up spasmodically for the entertainment of the readers of that sheet, and that is the bond case.

He has lately had a chronic attack, and nothing seems to be paramount to the times as this delectable hash. He would have the people believe, that it is a dreadful thing, this bond case, and is simply bankrupting the county. The fact is he has made so many statements and told them so often that he now believes them himself, as is usual with a confirmed liar. He croaks horribly about the expense and imagines it must be awful. He has called for a statement from the Auditor, just as though he was the great cyasticutus of the county, and what he dictated had to be assented to. His brass has prompted him to suppose that the office of Auditor was created for the sole purpose of pleasing him, and what he ordered that officer to do must be complied with. He has said something about the public demanding, &c, but when a little one-horse paper imagines itself the public, it is only an evidence of the amount of cheek and brass that enters so largely into its composition.

In its calling for a statement it forgets that any person who has a curiosity to know as to the expense of any thing pertaining to the county, has free access to the books in the Auditor's office, as they are public property. If the Auditor was assured that a majority of the people demanded a statement, he would be pleased to accede to the demand, but it must come from some other source besides the presumptive editor of the Press. Why has not that important being obtained this statement for himself if he thinks the public are so anxious on this point? The very fact that he has not implies that this great demand has existed only in the small brain of the editor aforesaid. We do not write this article as a reply to the chronic "squibs" that emenate from the above source, but to give a fair plain statement of the facts as they exist in this "celebrated bond case."

It will be remembered that in the year 1867 there was a deficit in the accounts of Ex-treasurer Blair of some $18,000 alledged to have been taken from the safe by burglars. The Commissioners brought suit to recover this amount from said officer. A judgement was obtained for $20-826 42 but on examination it was found that all the available property to be attached in the hands of said officer amounted only to some six or eight thousand dollars, and the suit was then prosecuted against the bondsmen of said officer to recover enough to make up the deficency. An appeal was taken by the Plaintiffs to the Supreme Court on some point but the question on the appeal being overruled the same case was remanded the defendant being required to pay the costs, the county being only at the expense of attorney fees. Another appeal was taken on another point to the same tribunal, and a second time sent back in favor of the county, the defendant again paying the costs, and there is where the case stands to-day. A greater part of the costs which have already occurred resulted from the first trial in which the county gained the judgment against Ex-treasurer Blair for the sum aforesaid, which was surely a good investment for the county. Since that time no general costs have been paid by the county, and the one item of attorney fees is all that stands against her so far. Is it not policy for the county to invest a few dollars to secure so large an amount of money, which ought to be in the hands of her officer, or is it best for her to say, that her officers and their bondsmen should not be held responsible for money in their hands.—That is the great precedent to be established in this "celebrated bond case."—Whenever it is established that the county must not hold her officers or their bondsmen responsible for the trusts she places in her hands, then we think further prosecution and expense is unnecessary, but until that point is gained we regard our present officers as but doing their duty in endeavoring to secure to the county the large amount of money that was placed in the hands of her servant, and at the same time establish beyond controversy, the fact that officers are and will be held responsible for all money coming into their hands.

There has been delay in the case as it now stands, Judge Pettit being selected by Judge Best, to try the case. Owing to sickness he has not been able to hold a session. It has been no fault of the county's attorneys that this delay has taken place.

Arrived—Mr. Haviland, contractor for eight miles of the Baltimore road, in this vicinity, arrived last week and is getting together a force to finish up the grading to be completed within his contract. He wishes to employ a number of men and teams, and our farmers have another chance to pull in a few more green backs to make up for the failure of the wheat crop. Mr. Haviland has had no trouble with his employees, so far, and we believe he works on the principle, that honesty is the best policy, and pays up promptly.

Track Laying Commenced.—The Baltimore road has obtained an engine form the Eel River Company, and have commenced to lay track at the junction. A large quantity of iron is already on hand, and more will be shipped as fast as needed.—With a large force at Defiance working this way, and another at the junction going on toward, it won't be long before the great States of Ohio and Indiana will have an additional band of iron to hold them together. The bridge and grade gangs will have all they can do to keep out of the way.

The Press says we "cabbaged" an article from the Laporte Argus and calls it rubbish, but after using the Laporte Herald to make a reply, could not gain say the fact that the Republican Legislature raised the State tax to about 20 cents more than it was under a Democratic administration, thus increasing the taxes of every farmer in the State, these hard times. People living in glass houses, &c. The article should have been credited to the Argus, though we might have re-written it, and thus had the credit of the item but that would have been imitating the Press in its way of manufacturing editorials.

Literary—The exhibition given by the Franklin Literary Society last Friday evening was a huge affair. The only objection that could be raised is, that it was not quite long enough, as the addition of one or two more exercises would have saved our citizens from getting up in the morning, as morning would have dawned ere the exercises closed. We stood it out until half past eleven, and there was a domestic summons in those cabalistic words "C. O. D." which translated means—"Come ommediately down" home or there will be a broom-stick after you.

The first part opened splendidly. The salutatory by Miss Schoonover was superb, equal in beauty of style and diction to some we have heard in colleges and academies. It was excellently delivered and much appreciated by the audience.—Nothing intervened to startle the audience now until the debate on the subject of dress of the sexes, when Spangler took hold of the subject and handled it without gloves, that is he had no gloves on, but his boots were in full view. There was'nt much star spangled oratory about it, but nevertheless the debator acquitted himself in good style. Miss McNerny answered in an able and well prepared defense of female dress, and showed up the amenities of the fashionable fop in an amusing and instructive manner. There was a piqueness in each point, a preciseness in the articulation that won for her the good opinion of the audience.

The oration of Mr. Moody was an elaborate and eloquent effort, but the occasion was hardly suited to do justice to the subject.

There were several essays some of which would have been much better had they been more brief.

The music was well selected and would have sounded well had it not been for the architectural beauty of our magnificent hall

But the crowning glory of the evening was the drama of the "Irish Tiger." There was a correctness in rendition, a sublimity in characterization that would have exasperated a blind man, had he seen it.—The boys did well considering the prompting they were subjected to. You can imagine how thrilling it must have been when a word like "yes" would bring down the house. Miss Josie Rush read a sprightly and neatly edited paper, and Albert Case made a fine effort in his valedictory

Pile-driving on the Baltimore road west of the junction seems so be a down hill business. We visited the tamarack swamp yesterday when the gang, under the leadership of Tom Moran who seems to understand his business had just driven a pile down to the depth of 508 feet. It seems almost incredible, but sixteen common trees, one upon the other were sent down before a good foundation was recovered.

We learn that a meeting of those citizens, along the line of Baltimore road between here and the river, and to whom a large amount of money is due for labor performed last year, held a meeting last Monday in Concord, and resolved that no railroad man would be permitted on their farms, no board would be furnished and not even a drink of water granted, until the money due was paid. We trust this will bring about an amicable settlement of the difficulty.

Our excellent and energetic friend C P. Houser, Esq., has accepted the agency for another year, for the celebrated Andrews desk, and school and church furniture generally. Mr. H. has been doing business in this line, in this and adjoining counties, and Trustees generally speak in flattering terms of his square and honorable dealings with them. Cal is honest, and energetic besides very clever and agreeable, and any one with whom he has dealings may rely upon his representations.

Enumeration.—We have been furnished the following report of the number of persons between the ages of 6 and 21 years, in Auburn, by W. Griswold, Esq.

Males	217
Females	227
Total	444

Last year the enumeration was 347, showing an increase this year of nearly one hundred. We regard this as a healthy condition for our town, neither too fast or slow, but a rate that we expect to advance for several years to come.

The South.

A SHOCKING quadruple tragedy is reported from Orange, Texas, on the Gulf. When Mr. Lyons and other citizens arrived, they found Ardazal endeavoring to burn the bodies. He was immediately arrested. For two weeks the condemned man was granted a daily allowance of a quart of whisky, and was so drunk when the hour of execution arrived, that he had to be supported on the scaffold while he made the customary harangue, without which a hemp matinee is voted a dull and uninteresting affair in many localities.

Judge Drummond decided that the State had not that right, but Chief-Justice Waite reverses this decision, and declares that such shares are taxable by local authorities. The question involves the validity of taxes levied by municipal as well as State authorities, and its decision settles a long-contested litigation....McCrary's Transportation bill rests in the Senate Committee on Railways and Canals, and there is no prospect of its coming forward this session.

Foreign.

THE London Times' Calcutta correspondent telegraphs that the distress from the famine is increasing in Tirhoot, and that, according to official estimates, 4,573,000 persons are still suffering from starvation....The report comes from Spain that Marshal Serrano has made overtures for peace to the Carlists, which have been defiantly rejected.

THE French Government has practically taken the position that it can do no wrong. A circular has been issued prohibiting newspapers from making attacks upon the septennat, and declaring that President McMahon's powers are incontestible. The septennat, or term for which the President's powers were fixed, was a measure of questionable expediency, and some of the more independent of the French papers were disposed to advocate its repeal. But a discussion of the measure is prohibited, and McMahon must be permitted to exercise those powers unquestioned. ....The Ecclesiastical bills have passed the upper house of the Austrian Parliament, and all the Bishops have withdrawn from that body.

HON. JOHN JAY, United States Minister to Austria, has sailed for home.

OVER fifty workmen were recently killed by an explosion in a coal mine in Lancashire, England....The remains of Dr. Livingstone, the great naturalist and African explorer, reached London on the 15th of April. The day was one of solemn parade and mourning in that city....Archbishop Llorenti, of Cuba, has been sentenced to imprisonment or banishment from the island....The trial of Archbishop Ledochowski, of Posen, for violation of the ecclesiastical laws, resulted in conviction, and he has been sentenced in contumaciam to dismissal from his see.

THE Spanish authorities in Cuba have sentenced to death an American named Dockery, an agent who was in Havana on business in connection with the settlement of a property claim, under the protection of a special treaty. ....Another ocean steamer is reported lost—the French steamship Amerique, en route from New York to Havre—which sank when within 100 miles of Brest, France, on the 14th. All on board were saved, except the second officer....The total gross revenue of the United Kingdom in the year ending March 3, 1874, amounted to £77,335,000, exceeding Mr. Lowe's estimate £3,574,000. The total gross expenditures for the same year were $76,465,000.

REVOLUTION IN ARKANSAS.

Gov. Baxter Forcibly Ejected from Office by Joseph Brooks, the Gubernatorial Claimant.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., April 15.—Joseph Brooks, who claims to have been elected Governor in 1872, took the oath of office to-day before Chief Justice McClure, and within five minutes from that time took forcible possession of the Governor's office and ejected Gov. Baxter by force. About one year ago Brooks commenced suit in the Circuit Court of Pulaski county for the office of Governor. About the same time the Attorney-General commenced suit against Baxter by quo warranto in the Supreme Court. That court rendered a decision that the courts of the State had no power over a contested election for the office for Governor, and it was generally regarded that the matter was settled so far as the courts were concerned. The Legislature, in 1873, opened the returns and declared that Baxter was elected. Little more was thought of the matter, until a few days ago, when the attorneys of Gov. Baxter desired that the case in the Circuit Court be taken up on demurrer, with a view of disposing of the same. The understanding was then had that the demurrer should be submitted and argued next week. On Monday, during the absence of Judges English and Compton, the attorneys of Gov. Baxter, Mr. Whipple, the attorney of Brooks, arose [illegible] himself and the counsel of Gov. Baxter that a demurrer to the jurisdiction of the court should be submitted. This, although in the absence of Gov. Baxter's attorneys, was thought nothing of at the time. Yesterday morning about 11 o'clock, when there were but few in the court-room, neither of the Governor's counsel present, the Judge (Whitlock) announced his decision, overruling the demurrer, and, none of Baxter's counsel being present to answer, plead over, or move for an appeal, judgment of ouster was issued, and the writ placed in the hands of the Sheriff, and, in five minutes from that time, an armed band, headed by Joe Brooks, went into the Governor's office, demanding possession. The Governor declined, whereupon forcible possession was taken, and guards placed at all the entrances to the office. In the meantime, Gen. Catterson, who claimed to act as Brooks' Adjutant-General, broke in the door of the armory, in the same building, and took possession of about 100 stand of arms, the Adjutant-General (Strong) of Gov. Baxter refusing to give up his keys.

Although surrounded by an armed mob, Gov. Baxter refused to be ejected except by force. Some of Mr. Brooks' men took hold of him and led him out. Since that time Brooks has had possession of the State-House. Gov. Baxter has established his headquarters at St. John's College, and it is reported the State-House will be taken possession of to-night. The greatest excitement prevails throughout the city.

The deposed Governor proposes to retake the State-House, and has notified President Grant to that effect, and appealed to him for support.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., April 16.—Brooks has issued a proclamation justifying his course, and declaring his intention to stay in office until the courts decide that he is not there legally. He holds the State-House with 150 men, well armed. They have two cannon, and pickets are thrown out in every direction.

Late this evening Baxter issued a proclamation declaring martial law in this (Pulaski) county, and calling upon the people to aid in putting down the "rebellion." About the same time he marched from St. John's College with his force of about 200 men, down into the heart of the city, placed guards all along the principal streets, completely commanding the State-House with a cordon of sentinels. He also seized the telegraph office, and issued instructions to permit no dispatches to be sent or delivered without the consent of the officer in charge. Both Baxter and Brooks have received dispatches from the Attorney-General stating in effect that the United States Government would not interfere. Telegraphic dispatches have also been received by the commanding officer here from the Secretary of War, instructing him to take no steps whatever to interfere in the matter, unless such action becomes absolutely necessary for the preservation of the public peace.

The House Currency Bill.

The following is the text of Maynard's bill providing for free banking, and for an increase of the volume of the currency. It passed the House by a vote of 123 to 116, and is now before the Senate:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 31 of the act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," approved on the 3d day of June, in the year 1864, be so amended that the several associations therein provided for shall not hereafter be required to keep on hand any amount of money whatever by reason of the amount of their respective circulations, but the money required by said section to be kept at all times on hand shall be determined by the amount of deposits in all respects as provided for in the said section.

SEC. 2. That section 22 of the said act, and the several amendments thereto, so far as they restrict the amount of notes for circulation under said act, be and the same are hereby repealed; and that section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the redemption of the 3 per cent. temporary loan certificates and for an increase of national bank notes," approved July 12, 1870, be amended by repealing the second proviso in said section contained, and the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled an act to provide a national currency secured by pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," approved on the 3d of March, 1865, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and section 21 of the original act, to which the act last aforesaid is an amendment, be, and the same is hereby, re-enacted.

SEC. 4. That every association organized or to be organized under the provisions of the said act, and of the several acts in amendment thereof, shall at all times keep and have on deposit in the Treasury of the United States a sum equal to 5 per cent. of its circulation, to be held and used only for the redemption of such circulation; and when the circulating notes of any such association or associations shall be presented, assorted or unassorted, for redemption in sums of $1,000, or any multiple thereof, to the Treasurer or to any Assistant Treasurer of the United States, the same shall be redeemed in United States notes. All notes redeemed shall be charged by the Comptroller of the Currency to the respective associations issuing the same, and he shall notify them severally, on the first day of each month, or oftener at his discretion, of the amount of such redemptions, whereupon each association so notified shall forthwith deposit with the Treasurer of the United States a sum in United States notes equal to the amount of its circulating notes so redeemed, and, when such redemptions have been so reimbursed, the circulating notes so redeemed, or, if worn, mutilated or defaced, new notes instead, shall be forwarded to the respective associations. Provided, that each of said associations shall reimburse to the Treasury the costs of redemption and of supplying new notes in place of those redeemed, and the associations hereafter organized shall also severally reimburse to the Treasury the costs of engraving and printing their circulating notes, and provided further, that the entire amount of United States notes outstanding and in circulation at any one time shall not exceed the sum of $400,000,000 now authorized by existing law.

SEC. 4. That any association organized under this act or any of the acts of which this is an amendment, desiring to withdraw its circulating notes in whole or in part, may upon deposit of lawful money within the meaning of said acts in sums of not less than $1,000 with the Treasurer of the United States, withdraw a proportionate amount of bonds deposited in pledge for such circulation, and he shall redeem, cancel and destroy an amount of the circulating notes of such association equal to the amount issued upon such bonds.

SEC. 5. That sections 31 and 32 of the said act be amended by requiring that each of the associations shall keep its lawful money reserves within its own vaults at the place where its operations of discount and deposit are carried on, and all the provisions of the said sections requiring or permitting any of the said associations to keep any portion of its lawful money reserve elsewhere than in its own vaults, or requiring or permitting the redemption of its circulating notes elsewhere than at its own counter, except as provided for in this act, are hereby repealed.

SEC. 6. That upon all circulating notes hereafter issued, or hereafter to be issued, whenever the same shall come into the Treasury in payment or deposit for redemption or otherwise, there shall be printed, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, the charter numbers of the associations by which they are severally issued.

Important Legal Decision.

A very important decision has been rendered in the United States Court at Chicago, by Judge Blodgett, in the matter of Albert E. Goodrich to limit the liability of the Goodrich Transportation Company for the loss of life and property occasioned by the loss of their steamer Sea Bird, which was burned in May, 1868, off Waukegan, Ill. The application was made by Mr. Goodrich under the act of Congress of March 3, 1851, entitled "An act to limit the liability of ship-owners, and for other purposes," and is the only case ever brought under this act with respect to losses in inland waters. Several parties lost their lives on this last trip of the ill-fated Sea Bird, and one suit was brought in a State court and sixteen in the United States Circuit Court by the representatives of the deceased, aggregating a very large sum of money. Elaborate arguments were made, and a preliminary injunction was granted last summer restraining the prosecution of the suits. Judge Blodgett has ordered the injunction to be made perpetual, holding under the act that the liability of the owners of the steamer was to be limited to the amount of their interest, over and above salvage, in the portions of the vessel and cargo saved, which, in this instance, amounted to the small sum of $460.

Civil Rights.

The substitute for the late Senator Sumner's Civil Rights bill, reported by Mr. Frelinghuysen from the Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate, is very stringent in its provisions. It provides that all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall be entitled to the full and equal enjoyment of inns, public conveyances—on land or water—theaters and other places of public amusement, and also of common schools and public institutions of learning or benevolence supported in whole or in part by general taxation, and of cemeteries so supported, subject only to conditions and limitations established by law, and applicable alike to citizens of every race and color, regardless of any previous condition of servitude. Any person denying to any citizen any privileges conferred by the bill shall pay $500 to the person aggrieved, and shall also be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $1,000, or be imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than one year. The District and Circuit Courts of the United States are given, exclusive of the courts of the several States, cognizance of all offenses against the bill, and actions may be prosecuted in any United States court wherever defendant may be found, without regard to the other party. Any District Attorney who shall willfully fail to institute and prosecute the proceedings required, shall, for every such offense, forfeit and pay the sum of $500 to the person aggrieved, and, upon conviction thereof, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000. No citizen shall be disqualified for service as a grand or petit juror in any State or United States court on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude, and any officer who shall exclude or fail to summon any citizen for that cause shall be fined not more than $5,000.

Free Exchange of Newspapers.

The following is the text of the bill passed by the United States House of Representatives, providing for the free exchange of newspapers between publishers, and the free transmission of newspapers by mail within the county of their publication:

That from and after the passage of this act the following mail matter shall be allowed to pass free in the mails:

First—Newspapers, periodicals and magazines reciprocally interchanged between publishers, and not exceeding sixteen ounces in weight, to be confined to a single copy of each publication.

Second—Newspapers, one copy to each actual subscriber residing or receiving same within the county where the same is published, but carriers shall not be required to distribute such papers unless postage is paid upon them at usual rates.

CONGRESS.

FRIDAY, April 10.—Senate.—A bill was passed exempting boats employed on canals and internal waters of any State from payment of all customs and other fees....The Commerce Committee reported adversely on the petition of citizens of Indiana and Kentucky for the passage of a law compelling bridges over the Ohio river to be constructed with a 400-feet span, and 160-feet pivot draw, and recommended that the committee be discharged from their further consideration. So ordered....Pending discussion of Stewart's Territorial Railroad bill the Senate adjourned.

House.—The House had a most exciting time on the finance question. Butler rose and stated his purpose in moving to go the Speaker's table. He wanted to relieve the country of its present uncertainty by taking up and passing the Senate Currency bill. Cobb asked Butler whether he favored the free banking provisions of the House Free Banking bill. Butler replied that he was in favor of some system of free banking. He then directly intimated that the President would not veto the Senate bill. Speaker Blaine called Butler to order, and said that under no circumstances had a gentleman the right to refer to what the President might do. It was grossly in violation of the rules of decorum. Butler said that he had mentioned the fact from public considerations only, and because the subject was noticed in the newspapers. For this latter fact he begged pardon, and he had referred only to a veto in a negative sense. Sunset Cox said that now that Butler had made a positive statement, he demanded his authority for such an extraordinary statement. Butler then, in great heat, said that he had not said that the President would not veto the bill. Great confusion followed, in the midst of which, above the tumult and noise of the quick gavel, Speaker Blaine's voice was heard, stating that such a discussion could not be allowed. Hale, of New York, asked if Butler considered the Senate bill simply an entering wedge. Butler declined to commit himself. He referred to Judge Hoar's speech yesterday, which referred to the past action of the President. Speaker Blaine said that was a very different matter. Hoar had referred to public documents. Butler had indicated a possible future act. Judge Hoar rose indignantly and said that Butler had spoken directly of a Presidential veto, and he himself had referred to a completed act. He trusted that he had a better appreciation of public dignity than to commit an act such as that of which Butler was guilty. Butler returned that he had had no consultation with the President about a veto. He was careful not to talk with him on such subjects. He feared that the President would differ with him, and he did not want to know it. The motion to reconsider the vote by which the House bill was postponed resulted in a tie. The Speaker gave the casting vote, and voted no. The vote by which the Free Banking bill was yesterday postponed to Tuesday was then reconsidered—128 to 120. The Mitchell amendment, which provides that in the event of an increase of national bank notes beyond $354,000,000, the legal-tender notes shall be retired and canceled until this amount is reduced to $300,000,000, was then voted down—79 to 160, as was also Farwell's amendment in relation to the sinking fund, and Merriam's substitute providing for the reduction of circulation at the option of national banks. The section which allows banks without circulation to be organized, and the section which provides for the issue of $2,000,000 of gold notes as a substitute for a like amount of legal-tenders, were stricken out. Kelley's 3 65-100 proposition was rejected by an exceedingly close vote. Without taking further action the House adjourned.

SATURDAY, April 11.—Senate.—Not in session.

House.—The contested seat from Kentucky was awarded to Young, the sitting member....The bill was passed permitting aliens, after six months' residence, to act as pilots and engineers....The struggle on the financial question was long, wearisome and fruitless. A large number of amendments were voted down, including Beck's proposition authorizing the issue of $400,000,000 legal-tenders, the retirement of the national bank notes and the substitution therefor of Treasury notes and 3.65 convertible bonds....The Speaker was almost unanimously sustained on a ruling that members who are directly interested in national banks had a right to vote on the Free Banking bill.

MONDAY, April 13.—Senate.—Bayard submitted an amendment to Carpenter's bill providing for a new election in Louisiana. In its preamble it sets forth that McEnery is the legally elected Governor, and requests the President to issue his proclamation recognizing him as such.... Chandler was excused from service on the Committee on Mines and Mining, and Jones substituted in his place.... A long debate ensued on the bill authorizing a new election in Louisiana without reaching a vote....The bill providing for the incorporation and regulation of railroads in the Territories was passed; also the House bill authorizing aliens to become pilots and engineers.

House.—The following bills were introduced: To regulate service in the collection of customs; relative to rates of freight and passengers on Pacific railroads; for the construction of a ship canal from the Mississippi river to the Gulf of Mexico; for improving navigation at the mouth of the Mississippi river....The rules were suspended, and the bill for the free exchange of newspapers between publishers, and the free transmission of newspapers by mail within the county of their publication, was passed by a vote of 178 to 41.... The bill for the transmission by mail of all seeds, cuttings and plants sent by the Commissioner of Agriculture was not so lucky. A motion to pass it under suspension of the rules was lost....A motion directing the Secretary of the Treasury to defer operations on all public buildings authorized and not begun also failed to pass under a suspension of the rules... Stone moved to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution reciting gross abuses and irregularities in the letting of mail contracts, and providing for the investigation thereof. After a long and angry discussion the resolution was referred to the Postoffice Committee.

TUESDAY, April 14.—Senate.—Sumner's Civil Rights bill (with an amendment) and the bill to provide for the payment of the bonds of the Louisville and Portland canal were reported from the Committees and placed on the calendar....Carpenter called up his Louisiana bill, which was discussed without action....Ingalls introduced a bill to regulate bids for Indian supplies.

House.—In the House a final disposition of the finance question was made by the passage of Maynard's bill, providing for free banking, and fixing the maximum amount of United States notes at $400,000,000, and also the [illegible] limit to the legal-tender circulation, but substitutes for the free banking scheme a section increasing the circulation of the national banks by $46,000,000. ....Bills were introduced and referred providing for the reorganization of the civil service and of the Treasury Department....A bill was passed abolishing the office of Appraiser of Imported Merchandise at Providence, Portland, Cleveland, Milwaukee, Memphis, Evansville, Louisville, Norfolk, Mobile, Toledo and Pittsburgh, and providing that there shall be only one Appraiser of Imported Merchandise at Philadelphia, Baltimore, Charleston and Savannah.....Cramer introduced a joint resolution submitting to the Legislatures of the several States an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, providing for the election of United States Senators by the people of the respective States. Referred to the Judiciary Committee.

WEDNESDAY, April 15.—Senate.—The House Free Banking bill was referred to the Finance Committee....House bill to pay the District of Columbia school-teachers $97,750 for their services from September, 1873, to March, 1874, was passed....Carpenter's bill to provide for a new election in Louisiana was discussed at length.

House.—A bill was passed abolishing mileage, and restricting the extra compensation of members of Congress to actual traveling expenses....The House, in Committee of the Whole, was engaged most of the day in considering the [illegible] Appropriation bill.

THURSDAY, April 16.—Senate.—Logan introduced a bill to enable disabled soldiers to receive money commutation upon orders for artificial limbs that are dated before June 16, 1870. Referred.... Carpenter introduced a preamble and resolutions setting forth the right of colonies to establish independent governments when they have the power to do so, and declaring it to be the duty of the United States, in view of the prolonged rebellion in Cuba and the probability that it will never be suppressed, to recognize Cuba as a free and independent sovereignty. The resolutions provide for strict neutrality on the part of the United States between the contending parties. They were referred to the Foreign Relations Committee....Ingalls introduced a bill to compel the Union Pacific Railroad Company to pro-rata all freights carried over its line in connection with other railroads.... The bill ordering a new election in Louisiana was debated by Carpenter, Morton, West, Howe and Hamilton (Md.).

House.—The session of the House was devoted to the consideration, in Committee of the Whole, of the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill, the only interesting feature of the proceedings being a sham battle between Dawes, Butler and Sunset Cox. A motion to strike out the proviso which forbids the publication of the laws in newspapers after March, 1875, was rejected.... Kelley, from the Centennial Committee, reported a bill appropriating $3,000,000 for the Centennial Exhibition. Referred to the Committee of the Whole.

The Lightning-Rod Man's Mistake.

Up in Blossburg, the other day, a lightning-rod man drove up in front of a handsome edifice standing in the midst of trees and shrubs, and spoke to Mr. Summers, who was sitting on the steps in front. He accosted Summers, as the owner of the residence, and said:

"I see you have no lightning-rods on this house."

"No," said Summers.

"Are you going to put any on?"

"Well, I hadn't thought of it," replied Summers.

"You ought to. A tall building like this is very much exposed. I'd like to run you up one of my rods; twisted steel, glass tenders, nickle-plated tips; everything complete. May I put up one and show you? I'll do the job cheap."

"Certainly you may, if you want to. I haven't the slightest objection," said Summers.

During the next half-hour the man had his ladders up and his assistants at work; and, at the end of that time, the job was done. He called Summers out into the yard to admire it. He said to Summers:

"Now, that is all well enough; but if it was my house, I'd have another rod put on the other side. There is nothing like being protected thoroughly."

"That's true," said Summers; "it would be better."

"I'll put up another—shall I?" asked the man.

"Why, of course, if you think it's best," said Summers.

Accordingly, the man went to work again, and soon had the rod in its place.

"That's a first-rate job," he said to Summers, as they both stood eyeing it. "I like such a man as you are—big-hearted, liberal, not afraid to put a dollar down for a good thing. There's some pleasure in dealing with you. I like you so much that I'd put a couple more rods on that house, one on the north end and one on the south, for almost nothing."

"It would make things safer, I suppose," said Summers.

"Certainly it would. I'd better do it, hadn't I—hey?"

"Just as you think proper," said Summers.

So the man ran up two more rods, and then he came down, and said to Summers;

"There, that's done; now let's settle up."

"Do what?"

"Why, the job's finished, and now I'll take my money."

"You don't expect me to pay you, I hope?"

"Of course I do. Didn't you tell me to put those rods on your house?"

"My house!" shouted Summers. "Thunder and lightning! I never ordered you to put those rods up. It would have been ridiculous. Why, man, this is the Court-House, and I'm here waiting for the court to assemble. I'm on the jury. You seem to be anxious to rush out your rods, and, as it was none of my business, I let you go on. Pay for it! Come, now, that's pretty good."

The Blossburg people say that the manner in which that lightning-rod man tore around town, and swore, was fearful. But when he got his rods off the Court-House, he left permanently. He doesn't fancy the place.

Horrible.

There is always a great deal of sport in Washington at the faux pas made by new members of Congress and their families, who are amused to the demands of fashionable life. Fancy the horror of the diplomats who were guests at a recent state dinner at the White House at seeing the wives of several Congressmen present in black dresses with high corsages. "Oh," exclaimed an appalled diplomat afterward, "it was horrible. Such a disrespect to the President and his wife!"—New York Graphic.

The One to be Congratulated.

A clergyman, writing to the Zion's Advocate, says: "I once married a bright young couple, and, as I took the bride by the hand, at the close of the ceremony, and gave her my warmest congratulations, she tossed her pretty face, and, pointing to the groom, replied, 'I think he is the one to be congratulated.'"

The Disposal of the Dead.

I assume that there is no point of view to be regarded as belonging to the deceased person, and that no one believes that the dead have any interest in the matter. We who live may anxiously hope—as I should hope at least—to do no evil to survivors after death, whatever we may have done of harm to others during life. But, being deceased, I take it we can have no wishes or feelings touching this subject. What is best to be done with the dead is, then, mainly a question for the living, and to them it is one of extreme importance. When the globe was thinly peopled, and when there were no large bodies of men living in close neighborhood, the subject was an inconsiderable one and could afford to wait, and might indeed be left for its solution to sentiment of any kind. But the rapid increase of population forces it into notice, and especially man's tendency to live in crowded cities. There is no necessity to prove, as the fact is too patent, that our present mode of treating the dead, namely, that by burial beneath the soil, is full of danger to the living. Hence intramural interment has been recently forbidden—first step in a series of reforms which must follow. At present we who dwell in towns are able to escape much evil by selecting a portion of ground distant—in this year of grace 1874—some five or ten miles from any very populous neighborhood, and by sending our dead to be buried there—laying by poison nevertheless, it is certain, for our children's children, who will find our remains polluting their water-sources, when the now distant plat is covered, as it will be, more or less closely, by human dwellings. For it can be a question of time only when every now waste spot will be utilized for food production or for shelter, and when some other mode of disposing of the dead than that of burial must be adopted. If, therefore, burial in the soil be certainly injurious, either now or in the future, has not the time already come to discuss the possibility of replacing it by a better process? We cannot too soon cease to do evil and learn to do well. Is it not indeed a social sin of no small magnitude to sow the seeds of disease and death broadcast, caring only to be certain that they cannot do much harm to our own generation? It may be granted, to anticipate objection, that it is quite possible that the bodies now buried may have lost most, if not all, their power of doing mischief by the time that the particular soil they inhabit is turned up again to the sun's rays, although this is by no means certain; but it is beyond dispute that the margin of safety as to time grows narrower year by year and that pollution of wells and streams which supply the living must ere long arise wherever we bury our dead in this country.—Popular Science Monthly.

All the Way from Danbury.

WHAT this country needs is a tin peddler with a red wagon.

IT is astonishing the amount of noise a red-haired boy will get out of a whistle.

A DANBURY man has brought out a new vermifuge with the significant name of "The Early Bird."

A LADY fainting at the Opera-House, Thursday evening, begged her husband with her failing breath not to forget to put the mackerel to soak.

A DANBURY lady of lately acquired wealth who visited Dr. Myers, Friday, to be vaccinated, said she wanted the highest-priced scab—an Alderney, she believed.

SOME people lose their temper upon the least provocation. A young man who was offensive to the parents of a young lady on Wooster street was caught there by the irate father Sunday evening, and after being freely cuffed on the side of his head was deliberately kicked into the street. Gaining his feet as soon as possible, he turned a passion-distorted face back at the old gentleman, and screamed through his white lips: "You do that again, and I'll punch your black snoot for you!" And immediately left to prepare the punch.

WITH blanched cheeks and welled eyes all Christendom yearns to learn the number of apples Adam and Eve ate in the Garden of Eden, and tremblingly awaits the correct responsive key. Two correspondents volunteer solutions: One thinks that, instead of Eve 8 and Adam 8 also, total 16, Eve 8-1—9, and Adam 8—1-2—11, total 20; the other correspondent writes: "I calculate that possibly Adam and Eve together ate 90 apples, thus: Adam ate (8) and Eve ate too (82). Who makes it more?" We do. List. Adam ate one (81) and Eve ate one too (812), total 893. Good-by—for this is about as many apples as any garden can raise.

A Texas Tragedy.

The New Orleans Picayune of the 2d inst. has the following: "On Monday night, the 30th ult., ten negroes entered the store of Mr. E. A. Leake, four miles from Bryan, Texas, and, after shooting him twice, inflicting wounds which have since been pronounced mortal, proceeded to outrage his wife. When seven of the fiends had accomplished this, the party fled. As soon as the facts became known, several of the neighbors started in pursuit. Four of the negroes were captured Tuesday, two of whom were put in jail, and the other two hung at once. Three more were caught and hung yesterday. There are three still at large, but their arrest is considered certain."

Two little girls, cousins, not a hundred miles from Providence, went to bed, the other night, in high glee over some secret. After they were asleep, the mother of the younger, going into their room, had her attention drawn to two little slips of paper, pinned to the wall, one over each little head. They proved to be rude attempts at illuminations in colored crayons, and ran thus: "O dear Jesus Christ, send mamma a baby; don't let it be twins. Amen."

PRESIDENT ANDREW WHITE, of Cornell University, has an exalted opinion of his lady students. He says he knows of but one instance of inability to keep well up with the class, and, as a rule, they average ten per cent. better on examination papers than the young men.

Influence of the Mind on Sensations.

Every one knows that the secretion of bile, the secretion of tears, and the secretion of saliva are very much under the influence of the nervous system. The purging of the bowels, which depends on a secretion there, or a secretion in the liver, is also much dependent on the influence of the imagination. The Emperor Nicholas tried to see what power there was in the imagination in that respect. Bread-crumb pills were given to a great many patients, and, as a result, most of them were purged. In one case a student, not of medicine but of theology, having the idea that the word pill meant a purgative, looked for "Pill" in the dictionary, and the first kind of pills that he found there was one composed mainly of opium and henbane, both astringents, and capable of producing great constipation. He wanted to be purged, and took a certain number of these pills, and instead of becoming constipated he was purged just as he wished to be.

Vomiting may be produced in the same way. Du Cros, a French physiologist, tells of a trial made in a hospital by a nurse, who went around and gave to all the patients a very harmless kind of medicine, and then told them that she was sorry that she had by mistake given them all powerful emetics. Out of 160 patients, 80 were affected as if they had taken the most violent emetic and vomited for a long time.

This we see on a very large scale on seaboard every summer. I have no doubt whatever that sea-sickness is in a great measure due to that, and if you could go on board of a steamer, with the idea that you would not vomit I am well satisfied, from experiments I have made, that you would escape a great deal of sea-sickness, if you did not escape it altogether. One fact I recall is very interesting. A person had crossed, on one occasion, a small bay where it was very rough. There was a man playing the violin on the boat. The person I refer to was terribly sea-sick and vomited a great deal. He had not, of course, made up his mind that he could not be sick. However, the point is that after that he could never hear a violin without vomiting.

To pass to something more serious: You have all heard of what are called the stigmata—marks representing the wounds on the limbs of Christ. Those marks have appeared in persons who have dreamed or imagined that they were crucified and suffering the pains of Christ, having invoked the goodness of God to let them have that suffering to punish them for their faults. The most remarkable fact of that kind is that concerning St. Francis of Assisi. There is no doubt that he had the mark as clear as possible. If you compare with this fact one which is related by Dr. Carter you will have the explanation of it. Dr. Carter says that while a mother was looking at her child who was standing at a window with the fingers on the border of the window just under the lifted sash, she saw the sash come down with great force and crush the three fingers of the poor child. The mother remained unable to move, feeling immediately a pain on the three fingers at the very place where the child had been injured. Her fingers swelled, an effusion of blood took place and ulceration followed and she was a long time in being cured.—Dr. Brown-Sequard's Lecture in New York.

Beer.

The London Morning Post says: Maine liquor laws are out of the question for England. In the United States the consumption of beer increased from 3,500,000 barrels in 1864-5 to 8,000,000 in 1872. In France, since the increase of the tax on beer, its consumption has declined, while "drunkenness has also fearfully spread since that alteration was made." There is a tradition that beer was first brewed in Pelusium, in Egypt, "in the year 2017." It is to be regretted that the invention cannot be ascribed to Noah, as a set-off to his discovery of the occult virtues of the grape. Beer is still brewed in Egypt, and is called "booza." The surplus corn of that fertile land perhaps suggested the use of the strong drink. The word "bere" is derived from the old Saxon term "berb" or barley. At present Bavaria is, as might be expected, among the foremost of beer-drinking nations. She shows a consumption of 191 maas "per year and per head." Porter and ale were invented about the year 1730. Before that time ale was not brewed with hops. Porter was invented by a brewer named Harwood. England and Bavaria are now the two foci of the brewing world. Our system adopts high fermentation; the Bavarian method produces a milder and thicker beer.

Searching for Sunken Treasure.

More Spanish treasure is to be recovered after submersion for upward of 150 years. It lies in the harbor of Vigo and amounts to about $37,000,000. It is stated that this treasure was sunk in the harbor in September, 1702, since which date several efforts were made to recover it. The discovery of the diving-bell encouraged an Englishman named Dickson to make an attempt to raise the vessel in 1825. He found two ships, but gave up the enterprise for want of capital. In 1859, another Englishman repeated the attempt, but failed for the same reason. In 1869, Col. Gowen, an American, who had distinguished himself by raising seventy vessels sunk in the harbor of Sebastopol, was offered the job of raising the sunken galleons for the Spanish Government, and set to work to form a company to carry out the enterprise. Owing to a technicality in his concession it was given to a French company, but the breaking out of the war delayed the preliminaries. Since then, Col. Gowen has purchased the right of the French company and transferred it to an American association. It is probable that the work will be commenced almost immediately. The Spanish Government needs some such expansion of its currency.

Through Many Hands.

In viewing that tiny bit of steel called a needle, it is hard to realize that seventy pairs of hands are required to make it perfect. Seventy pairs of hands to make a needle! and each pair necessary to make the needle perfect. If only one pair refused to do their part, the whole would be a failure—not a needle would be right. It is painstaking in little things and in small parts which leads to excellence and success. We are apt to slight bits of work, thinking it is no matter and of no account. But it is not so. The details of a plan must be faithfully carried out in order to make the plan a success. If the parts of a work are all well done, the whole will be complete, and only then.

The unfortunate man was brought to the city, where a black-haired lad named Weston gazed upon the ghastly wounds a moment and fainted. On being restored to consciousness his hair was as white as snow."

FARMERS, AWAKE!

BY A. M. CASE.

What mean those sounds that in the air
  Give forth their solemn, earnest warning?
Those tokens of a darkening night—
  The prelude of a doubtful morning?

Hear ye the sound—the trumpet peal—
  That o'er the land to-day is swelling?
Know ye the wrongs the million feel?
  The story sad that blast is telling?

A tyrant rides o'er this fair land,
  And marks for his unjust oppression
Each son of toil, whose sturdy arm
  Creates the home in his possession.

That tyrant, with the mighty power
  Of gold and bonds as his dominion,
Rules courts, and dictates laws of trade;
  Defies the voice of just opinion.

Who feeds this pampered lord of wealth?
  This foul, remorseless, bloated vulture?
The sons of toil, rough laboring hands,
  And brawny arms of agriculture.

Awake! to arms! let freemen strike
  The patriot blow, for freedom ever;
Let lawless sharks and railroad lords
  Know that our will their rings can sever.

Press on the hosts, bear up the flags,
  Encourage each desponding neighbor;
Unswerving battle for the right
Must end in victory for Labor.

—Industrial Age.

Our Railroad Nabobs.

[Extract from a Speech of Willard C. Flagg, at Madison, Wis.]

As to the association of capital, our republican democracy seems to have shown itself more complacent and facile than wise. Recognizing the undoubted impulse given to industry and trade by large amounts of capital, skillfully managed, we have granted corporations for nearly every possible purpose, giving special privileges and powers of making money to organized capital without much thought of the great masses who must make their money, if they make any, by earning it. Now, what is the result? In the first place, a sum exceeding our national debt, and probably equal, or nearly so, to all our public indebtedness, has been invested in railway stocks, on which we are expected to pay ten per cent. interest, and on which we did actually pay, for 1872, as Mr. Poor tells us, 5.2 per cent. on the so-called cost of $3,159,423,057, which is nearly double the capital stock. Next, $350,000,000 in national bank stock, an unknown amount in the stock of other banks, insurance companies, etc., upon all of which it is essential to their good standing that a good rate of interest be made; so that, in addition to public debts amounting in 1870 to $3,271,874,768, the people of this country have to carry as much more in the shape of corporate stock. The evil of this stock is its perpetuity. The persons who own it may change; but the stock remains, a perpetual incubus; men may come, and men may go, but it goes on forever. This is not so with private capital. The unsuccessful merchant, or mechanic, or farmer, simply gets a low rate of interest, or sinks a part of his capital; but capital stock must pay, and, I believe, does pay, about double the interest that the farmer makes from his farm. The result, unless the tendency is checked, is the absorption of private capital by capital stock. In the words of a writer in the North American Review (Jan., 1873,): "It is evident—for it is a mathematical proposition—that this movement of property from the many to the few, if unchecked, will, sooner or later, make the few the possessors of all property, while the masses will be necessarily impoverished, and virtually enslaved. The ratio of relative increase on the one hand, and of diminution on the other, will make the time required for this consummation proportionally longer or shorter; but it cannot change the result."

Thus far I have spoken simply of what I may call the legitimate results of the association of capital in corporations—of what they can do and actually effect under the management of honorable men. But there are even worse phases than this. Capital, in the hands of a few, is organized with facility, handled rapidly, and may be used unscrupulously. It may do more mischief in a democracy than elsewhere. "In democracies," said De Tocqueville, "statesmen are poor, and have their fortunes to make." He could not have put it more scathingly had he seen the Credit-Mobilier in a vision.

Associated capital again takes a most oppressive form in the shape of monopolies. These are the result of conspiracies against the public's welfare, effected sometimes by obtaining exclusive National or State legislation or grants, and sometimes by buying up, crushing out, or combining with rivals, so as to destroy the legitimate workings of the law of supply and demand. Our transportation by rail, and even by water, is largely done in this way. Each railway, to start upon, has a practical monopoly of the country through which it runs, except, possibly, at a few points where it is crossed by roads with which it has combined. The routes from the interior to the seaboard are dominated by a railway despotism as lawless and rapacious as the robber bands of the ancient Rhine. The commerce of the Upper Mississippi is practically monopolized by a single steamboat line. The whole railway system of California, and the navigation of her rivers, are in the hands of a legalized band of robbers. The very transportation of the Columbia river is given up to a corporation; and wheat, $1.15 per bushel at Portland, has hardly a market value on its upper waters. Elevator "rings" infest our lake cities, a towboat ring the mouth of the Mississippi; and producer and consumer must pay heavy toll for the privilege of transit.

I might lengthen this list with showing the monopolies afforded by what are called protective tariffs, and by patents wrongly granted, or injudiciously extended; and I might name the well-organized monopolies in school books, in plows, that are not to be sold to clubs and Granges for less than retail rates; but I forbear.

All these evils of corruption, monopoly and extortion, though found in many forms of associated capital, are peculiarly and specially the work of our railway corporations. The most threatening danger to the liberties of Americans to-day lies in the dangerous power now held and wielded by our railway corporations. Vast monopolies dominate our thoroughfares to the seaboard. Their chartered powers are great; their financial strength is enormous. These in their turn, are controlled by a few men, often of brutal instincts, who desire and appreciate only the power that money gives in our wealth-thirsting communities. They are moneyed aristocrats, the basest form of nobility—a nobility that compels no nobleness. They are mainly unscrupulous in their means, and entirely selfish in their action. Bribery and corruption are their custom when dealing with governments; extortion and brutality mark their conduct toward private persons. They lavish their ill-gotten wealth with a varied taste, on horses, harlots and theological seminaries. They enrich their confiding constituencies of stockholders with "watered stock," and plunder them again in the guise of "legal services." They wantonly disregard even the time-honored precept of "honor among thieves," and turn traitors to one another if it will only pay. Well may we say with Geo. P. Marsh, our present Minister to Italy, that "the example of the American States shows that the private corporations—whose rule of action is the interest of the association, not the conscience of the individual—though composed of ultra-democratic elements, may become most dangerous enemies to rational liberty, to the moral interests of the commonwealth, to the purity of legislation and of judicial action, and to the sacredness of private rights."

Farmers Must Read and Think More.

How very important it is at this period of our country's history that farmers, as a class, should read and think more upon all subjects appertaining to and bearing upon their vocation; that their minds should be cultivated as well as their fields; that their moral sense should be quickened, and that they should have the means within their reach of learning the current history of the times, of observing the action of their public servants, and be prepared to exercise, at all times, with wisdom, the momentous privilege of an American citizen, the right to vote.

The grange meetings, if punctually attended and properly conducted, will supply, to a great extent, this desideratum, and must, necessarily, be productive of immense benefit to society.

Through the grange will be communicated knowledge to many who have no other means of acquiring it. It will call into exercise minds that before rusted unused. It will elevate vast numbers of men from the abjectness of a mere animal condition to the nobler station of intelligent being. Its usefulness will constitute the true means of dignity, as well on account of the true character of its members, as the extent of its operations.

The Patron of Husbandry to be a thinker must be a reader; it therefore should be the duty of every officer of a grange to appoint himself or herself a committee of one to see that each member is supplied with reading matter. The lecturer should bring the subject prominently before the grange at each meeting, collect and distribute newspapers, magazines, pamphlets and circulars, bearing upon the vocation of the farmer or his duty as a citizen. Such a course of instruction strictly adhered to and conscientiously carried out, would bear good fruits in less time than many would imagine.

We, as Patrons, profess, for our main object, to promote the cause of education, to relieve an oppressed people, and to teach the principles of truth and justice to all; but we cannot accomplish much unless we commence the good work at home.—Farmer's Vindicator.

Heaven Speed the Grangers.

The grange is an organization of farmers. It has for its object improvement. It is designed to elevate and enlighten the farmer. It would better qualify him for his God-given profession. It aims to bring about these objects by association. It unites those of the same calling into one great brotherhood for the protection of all. It establishes in every neighborhood a lecture-room—which is the grange itself—in which the most important truths are unfolded. It disseminates valuable information, that all may be benefited. It collects as well as dispenses it. It is an intellectual institution. It brings mind in contact with mind, and, by the contrast, other minds are illuminated by the attraction. It draws out latent talent. It makes active and tangible what has been before dormant and unseen. It shows the importance of cultivating brains as well as soil. It demonstrates the fact that rich harvests are developed by brain culture—that a great crop of weeds has grown up and smothered out the useful plants by the neglect of brain culture. The grange is a social institution. It unites by strong ties those that have before been strangers. It makes each feel an interest in all, and all in each. It heals up the wounds of the unfortunate. It administers comfort to the sick, and alleviates the sufferings of the distressed. It is a husband to the widow and a father to the orphan. It makes every neighborhood one kind, affectionate family. It is a financial institution. It seeks to obtain for its members the highest price for their products. It looks to the good of all. It learns how and when the best prices can be obtained. It cuts the Gordian knot which has bound the farmer to the middle man who has absorbed the chief profits of his labors. It throws its protecting arms over and around all, and would make them more independent.—Page County Democrat.

Women as Patrons of Husbandry.

A cautious woman, in the Rural New-Yorker of February 21, asks some Patron of Husbandry the following questions: "Have you realized any or all of your expectations? Are your homes happier, your burdens lighter, your prosperity greater?" To which I answer: It is too soon to look for great results. The oppressions which called our order into existence were the growth of years, and it will take time and patience to remove them; but it will be our own fault if we fail in the end. Our homes are happier in proportion as order and intelligence pervade them; and will it not assist us in this to impart our ideas to others, and get theirs in exchange? And cannot this be done to better advantage in the company of fifty or a hundred farmers' wives, than by spending so much time in miscellaneous visitings, as some do? The social part of the grange promises to be more beneficial to women than men, as they live more isolated from each other. Every one's prosperity will be greater in proportion as he or she applies the maximum of economy taught by the grange to business.

Means of Checking Coughing, Sneezing, Etc.

There are many facts which show that morbid phenomena of respiration can be also stopped by the influence of arrest. Coughing, for instance, can be stopped by pressing on the nerves on the lip in the neighborhood of the nose. A pressure there may prevent a cough when it is beginning. Sneezing may be stopped by the same mechanism. Pressing also in the neighborhood of the ear, right in front of the ear, may stop coughing. It is also true of hiccough, but much less so than for sneezing or coughing. Pressing very hard on the top of the mouth inside is also a means of stopping coughing; and I may say that the will has immense power there. There was a French surgeon who used to say, whenever he entered the wards of his hospital, "The first patient who coughs here will be deprived of food to-day." It was exceedingly rare that a patient coughed then.

There are many other affections associated with breathing which can be stopped by the same mechanism that stops the heart's action. In spasms of the glottis, which is a terrible thing in children, as you well know, as it sometimes causes death, and also in whooping-cough, it is possible to afford relief by throwing cold water on the face, or by tickling the soles of the feet, which produces laughter, and at the same time goes to the gray matter that is producing the spasm and arrests it almost at once. I would not say that these means are always successful. I would not say that we can always prevent cough by our will; but in many instances those things are possible, and if you remember that in bronchitis and pneumonia, or any other acute affection of the lungs, hacking or coughing greatly increases the trouble at times, you can easily see how important it is for the patient to try to avoid coughing as best he can.

How They Kill Cattle in Texas.

A correspondent of the Baltimore American says: "The ordinary plan of drawing the steer down to the block, and striking him on the head with an ax, is too slow for the wholesale butchery carried on here. About one dozen head are driven into a small pen, just sufficiently large to hold that number closely packed, and a gate forced to behind them. This pen has an open slat platform across the top of it, upon which two men are stationed, with sharp pointed knives fixed on the end of them. With a rapidity acquired by long practice, they plunge their spears into the necks of the affrighted animals, cutting the jugular vein, and each successively falls as if struck down with an ax. The blood spurts out in streams as if from a dozen fountains, and in less than a minute the whole penful are down quivering in the throes of death, and covered with blood. The door of the pen leading into the rendering room is then thrown open, the animals drawn out in succession, a knife rapidly splits the skin around the neck and down the stomach. A rope is attached to the upper part of the hide by a clamp, at the other end of which is a mule, which leisurely walks off down the yard, carrying the skin of the animal with him, and leaving the carcass still quivering with animal life. A tackle hoists the body up to a level with the mouth of one of the immense cauldrons, and in less time than we have taken to describe the process, it is in the seething and boiling mass. There are four or five of these cauldrons, each large enough to hold a dozen beeves, and they are kept constantly going during the killing season. The tallow is drawn off into hogsheads, and the remains of these great soup kettles are carried out to what is called the "hash pile," consisting of bones, horns, and the animal matter from which all the substance has been extracted."

RETAINERS AND REFRESHERS.—Who would not be a "Q. C." in England? Mr. Hawkins, for conducting the prosecution against Arthur Orton, received a retainer of 1,000 guineas and a refresher of 100 guineas for each day of the trial. The trial lasted for 89 days, so that Mr. Hawkins received in all $49,500. He is now retained as counsel in six different election petitions, with a retaining fee in each case of 600 guineas and 100 guineas refresher each day. Each of these cases will last at least a week, so that Mr. Hawkins' fees will amount to at least $21,000. Mr. Giffard, Q. C., has been retained in eleven election petition cases, Mr. Sergeant Ballantine in nine, and Mr. Powell, Q. C., in five—all with very liberal fees. Mr. Hawkins' practice is said to be worth $280,000 a year, while there also dangles before his eyes the almost certain prize of a judgeship when he gets tired of making money and will be content with a modest $25,000 a year for the rest of his life.—New York World.

THE TICHBORNE JURY.—The jury in the Tichborne case were allowed 300 guineas each for their ten months of service, or somewhat over $1,500. They petitioned, in open court, early in the trial, for two guineas a day, and were as good as promised it by the Bench, but "the present Government" coolly observe that they don't find any record of such a promise on the books of the Treasury, and don't know anything about it. As the jury were picked business men, whose time was particularly valuable, they think it pretty tough.

CREAM SAUCE.—Add a cup of sugar to one-half cup of thick sour cream. Beat these together ten minutes. Grate nutmeg over it. Nice for Indian puddings.

BRAHMA'S ANSWER.

BY R. H. STODDARD.

Once, when the days were ages,
  And the old Earth was young,
The high gods and the sages
From Nature's golden pages
  Her open secrets wrung,
  Each questioned each to know
Whence came the Heaven above, and whence the Earth below.

Indra, the endless giver
  Of every gracious thing
The gods to him deliver,
Whose bounty is the river
  Of which they are the spring—
  Indra, with anxious heart,
Ventures with Virochunu where Brahma is apart.

"Brahma! Supremest being!
  By whom the worlds are made,
Where we are blind, all seeing,
Stable, where we are fleeing,
  Of Life and Death afraid—
  Instruct us for mankind,
What is the body, Brahma? O Brahma! what the mind!"

Hearing as though he heard not,
  So perfect was his rest,
So vast the Soul that erred not,
So wise the lips that stirred not—
  His hand upon his breast
  He laid: whereat his face
Was mirrored in the river that girt that holy place!

They questioned each the other
  What Brahma's answer meant.
Said Virochunu, "Brother,
Though Brahma the great Mother
  Hath spoken her intent,
  Man ends as he began—
The shadow on the water is all there is of Man!"

"The earth with woe is cumbered,
  And no man understands;
They see their days are numbered
By one that never slumbered
  Nor stayed his dreadful hands.
  I see with Brahma's eyes—
The body is the shadow that on the water lies."

Thus Indra, looking deeper,
  With Brahma's self possessed.
So dry thine eyes, thou weeper!
And rise again, thou sleeper!
  The hand on Brahma's breast
  Is his divine assent,
Covering the soul that dies not. This is what Brahma meant

"WHEN Shakespeare wrote about patience on a monument, did he refer to doctors' patients?" "No." "How do you know he didn't?" "Because you always find them under a monument."

SAYS a wit: "Last year I saw a watch spring, a note run, a rope walk, a horse fly, and even the big trees leave. I even saw a plank walk, and a Third Avenue bank run; but the other day I saw a tree box, a cat fish, and a stone fence. I am now prepared to see the Atlantic coast and the Pacific slope."

A BOY was passing through the cars of the Erie railroad, the other morning, with an illustrated copy of "Nothing to Wear." A lady remarked, "I suppose that takes off the ladies?" "No," said a gentleman, "it takes off their dresses." "Then," rejoined the lady, "it is quite proper that a stripling should sell it."

MARY had a little lamb,
  With whom she used to tussel,
She snatched the wool all of his back,
  And stuffed it in her bustle.

The lamb soon saw he had been fleeced,
  And in a passion flew,
But Mary got upon her ear,
  And stuffed the lamb in, too.

Japanese Dwellings.

The streets of Yokohama are wide and straight. Each house is built of wood, without an atom of paint, and is a real toy-house, a genuine Liliputian Swiss chalet, built with a taste, a nicety and a neatness which are admirable. The Japanese are wonderful workers in wood, and it is a pleasure to see the roofs, so light and yet so strong, supported by walls which are made, like the side-scenes in a theater, of thin strips of wood, over which are pasted sheets of a cottony, transparent paper. In the evenings, when the lanterns dispense their soft light round the inside of these white buildings, the spectator seems to be looking at a magic-lantern. During the daytime the sides of the houses are slipped out, as side-scenes are, and the house becomes only a roof resting on the four light corner posts, the whole interior being thus opened to the air. Every part of the house is exposed to view, and everything done in it can be seen, while behind it appear the charming verdure, the cascades, and the diminutive plantations of the little gardens situated in the rear.

Select Story.

Better Than he Seemed.

A quaint old town was Hereford. Its buildings were antiquated and its inhabitants clung so tenaciously to the traditions of their forefathers that no more obstinate or exclusive set of land owners could be found in the whole shire.

Scarcely more than two thousand souls comprised the population, but what they lacked in numbers was balanced by the extreme respectability of those who lived and carried themselves as little lords among the tenantry. Hereford had its banking-houses. To be sure it was a diminutive appendage of the big concern at Liverpool, but Mr. Sandhurst Tipton, M. P., resident partner presided over its dignity and lived in the old brick mansion on the top of the hill, screened from the vulgar gaze by the heavy yew trees that formed a cordon about his retreat. Hereford also had its established church, and its good vicar Dr. Stole, though an austere man on the church homilies, could, nevertheless, at times be as decorously jolly as the worst of his parishoners, and was a rough rider when the hounds were in full cry

The family of Mr. Sandhurst Tipton consisted of his wife and two daughters. The former was a tall, stern looking lady, with enough dignity to have satisfied the most exclusive aristocrat, while the daughters, Augusta and Cecily, to the disgust of their parents, most unaccountably had imbibed notions altogether too plebian for their nation and birth. It was Mrs. Tipton who had insisted on their being educated abroad, and it had ever since been to her a source of lamentation, and her more astute husband who had opposed the scheme but nevertheless had yielded to his wife's wishes, never failed to remind her that the consequences was the result of her own folly.

Mrs. Tipton knew this full well, therefore she never sought to gainsay its truth, only she extenuated her mistake as best she could, reminded her lord that she had been educated at the same institution whither she had sent her daughters, and come out sans reproche.

Precept and expostulation seemed lost on those wilful girls, and they only laughed at the lectures they received, frequently replying by some club house phrase they had obtained heaven knows where. Two London seasons failed to eradicate the blemish of their characters, and now Mr. Tipton and wife had resigned themselves to the unhappy conviction that they must patiently endure what they cannot cure.

The sisters were out one day on horseback, and, as was their custom they were unattended by an escort. Augusta, who was a dashing horsewoman, was riding near the edge of a wood that was bounded by a thorn hedge. On the opposite side was a young man who had fallen asleep while reading a book which was lying on the green sward. At a banter from Cecily, Augusta put her horse at the hedge and made him leap clear over it. A cry of pain immediately followed, and the young man sprang to his feet, then staggered and fell with his forehead cut open by the hoof of Augusta's horse.

'Tie your horse and climb over here this instant,' she called to her sister. 'I believe I have killed poor fellow.—How perplexed this is, to be sure.'—She had sprung from her saddle, and knelt beside the bleeding man while he was all unconscious of the fair figures that were twisting a cambrick handkerchief about his temples.

Cecily, in conformity with her sister's summons, had scrambled through the hedge, and was doing what she could to bring the stranger to consciousness.

'He is handsome, dont you say so Gussy?' she asked, gazing at his pale face.

Her sister made no reply, but clutched at her vinaigrette, and applied it to his nostrils.

It happened that Cecily at that moment spied a letter lying on the ground near the book. In an instant she had caught it up and with a womanly curiosity was examining the superscription. It was postmarked, Brussels, and was directed to Mons Louis Bernier, London.

Cecily pressed her hand upon her brow, as if in thought, and then handed the letter to Augusta. The latter looked sharply at the superscription, and then remarked: "Oh, that's it. How strange!'

'Where did we hear that name?' asked Cecily. 'I am sure we have come across it.

'In the newspaper,' replied her sister. 'Don't you remember, a few days ago, the announcement that the Count Bernier's son was implicated in that French plot, and the flight of young Bernier to Belgium.

'True enough. Wouldn't it be romantic if our stranger and young Bernier were identical?'

Augusta pushed the letter into the young man's pocket none too soon for his eyes opened and he gazed languidly at his fair companions.

'Do you feel much pain?' inquired Augusta. 'I really cannot express my sorrow at having been the author of your accident. It is very strange you did not hear us.

'I was asleep, mademoiselle,' he answered, in a low voice, that had just enough of the French accent in it to betray his nationality.

A half hour after, the two sisters were sitting beneath a tree with Louis Bernies telling them the story of his life.

In one of the houses at the outskirts of the town Louis Bernier had found a temporary home with a stout yeoman named Perry Hawks. There were very many reasons why he desired obscurity at that moment, and not the least of which was to keep the Count, his father, in ignorance of his whereabouts. He therefore gave an assumed name; when Augusta boldly charged him as being the Count Bernier's son, and having to fly his country, then he revealed himself. The positive and unexpected manner of Augusta Tipton had taken him at a disadvantage, and he surrendered at discretion, only stipulating that if they ever met in the presence of others, they should know him as Mr. Lewis.

Shortly after the event just narrated a young man named Lewis appeared at the bank of Mr. Tipton and deposited several thousand pounds, at the same time presenting a letter of introduction from one of his London friends, who spoke of Mr. Lewis as the son of a distinguished gentleman, residing abroad. The banker offered Mr. Lewis the hospitalities of his house, and invited him to dine.

Lewis' complexion was naturally pale, but upon the present occasion it was whiter than usual, and the newly healed seam across his forehead was still visible in a crimson line. His introduction must have caused Augusta and Cecily some secret amusement. Be that as it may, they never by look or by sign betrayed the tho'ts that passed through their minds.

Every small community seems to be afflicted with one or more persons whose chief business seems to be in discovering facts regarding their neighbors hitherto unknown, and then, without loss of time proclaiming them to the discomfiture of those concerned. In the person of Thomas Delong, Hereford had one of these enterprising individuals. Moreover he was the nephew of Sandhurst Tipton. The banker had for years set his face against his nephew's manner of life, but 'as blood is thicker than water,' he could not cast off his dead sister's child, so Tom had a carte blanche to his uncle's house, where he never failed to disgust his aunt or her husban by his slang of the race-course and the prize ring, in his estimation two of England's most valued institutions.

Mr Tipton was sitting in his room one day at the bank when Tom entered.

'Good day, uncle,' he said, flinging himself carelessly on a sofa.

Mr. Tipton raised his eyes, and welcomed his nephew in a common-place manner.

Who was that fellow you had up to the house to dinner the other day?'

'I am not aware that I had any 'fellow,' answered the banker with some severity of tone.

'Oh, you object to the term do you?' said Tom 'Let me qualify by calling him a chap.'

'Quite as objectionable as your previous expression, sir. If you refer to Mr. Lewis, who has deposited in the bank, and has brought me a letter of introduction from my friend Colonel Branford, I request you to speak of him with more respect.

'Branford! Branford!' replied Tom 'Why that's the name of the shooter who used to stop with you so often a few years past. Did you notice his death in the Mail?'

Mr. Tipton started from his seat grasped the paper. Sure enough, Col. Branford had fallen dead at his club. Verdict, apoplexy. So sudden was the news that the banker felt sick and was obliged to swallow some wine. Branford and himself had been school fellows, and in a day or two he was to see him.

'What were you going to say regarding Mr. Lewis, Thomas?' asked the banker.

'I was simply going to state that I have good reason to doubt that he is what he represents himself and perhaps if I give you my reason you will come down from that high horse you are on and listen to what I have to say. Please tell me the day that Mr. Lewis as you call him, dined with you.'

'Let me see,' replied the banker running the days over in his mind—'it was last week Friday.'

'Friday is an unlucky day to bet on a horse, whatever it may be on a man Friday wee, hey? Well; Uncle Sand for a week or more previous to his introduction to my cousins, they had met every few days, and as far as they are concerned I don't think that an introduction was at all necessary.'

'How dare you to make such an assertion?' cried the banker, springing to his feet, and confronting his nephew with face alternately red and white.

'Because I interrupted the meeting myself,' replied Tom, with the utmost coolness; and I dare assert anything I know to be true; but if you won't believe, why of course it don't make any difference to me. Goodbye,' and he arose to leave.

'Stay!' responded the uncle, 'tell me all about it.'

Tom seated himself again, and gave a detailed account of the times he had seen Augusta and Cecily meet Lewis. Each time they met near the scene of the accident near the wood. Tom never heard any conversation between them; he was up among the trees getting grubs to go a fishing

Mr. Tipton left the bank earlier than usual that day and upon his arrival home his daughters were summoned to his presence, and requested to give an explanation of their previous acquaintance with Lewis.

In a short, decisive way Augusta related the accident that occurred on her leaping the hedge, and frankly admitted that both she and Cecily had met Lewis even as Tom Delong had reported.

'Then why did you not mention it? At least, why did you let me suppose you were strangers when I brought him here? Explain that if you please?

'I cannot do that,' replied his daughter, 'at least without violating his confidence.'

'His confidence,' sneered her father. 'Ho! it has come to that, has it? That will do.'

Mr. Lewis received a short, curt note through the post, in the handwriting of Sandhurst Tipton, requesting a suspension of his visits to the house, and declining any further intercourse except on business.

By the same mail came a foreign letter for Lewis (whose retreat it seems had been discovered,) giving him intelligence of the death of his father, and requesting his return to France, his family having obtained his pardon from the Governor.

Notwithstanding the vigilance of Mr. Tipton and Tom Delong, Augusta and Lewis had a final interview; then he was seen no more.

A year had passed away, and Mr Tipton had ceased to remember Lewis, when he one day received a letter from the British Embassador at Paris, informing him that Count Bernier—a distinguished nobleman, then in the King's service, was about to visit England and that he would have the pleasure of giving him an introduction to Mr. Tipton.

The banker read the communication with feelings of pleasure; it was always gratifying to his vanity to be the recipient of such communications. His wife, to whom he exhibited the letter at once began to plan a match for her daughter Augusta; the latter indulged in such hearty screams of laughter that the propriety of her mother was shocked.

It was arranged that a grand dinner be given in honor of the Count's arrival. A malicious smile was ever playing upon the lips of Augusta, which both her father and mother attributed to a wrong motive.

In his old accustomed seat at the bank, Sandhurst Tipton was sitting some months afterward when the card of Count Bernier was handed him,

'Show him in immediately cried the banker, springing toward the door. The next moment he had mechanically grasped the hand of the, Count and the two stood regarding each other in silence. At last Mr. Tipton spoke:

'How is 'this?' I believe I am looming upon Mr Lewis?'

The Count smiled, and, sitting down beside the banker explained all that was mysterious in his first visit to Hereford, and completely satisfied the banker of the propriety of all his actions.

Before leaving the bank Count Bernier had obtained Mr. Tipton's consent to propose to his daughter.

'Come down stairs,' cried the banker as he arrived at his door, absolutely forgetting for the moment his decorum, 'come down here and see an old acquaintance.

A few weeks later there was a grand time at the Tipton mansion; everybody was jolly and none more so than Dr. Stole, as he fussed and fumed about the rooms, Augusta was to marry a nobleman after all. Her mother's cup of joy almost run over, Tom Delong was there and he did not call the Count 'a fellow,' and suspended his slang phrases except in one solitary instance when his aunt ask him what he thought of the ceremony, he replied:

'Well the parson gave them a fair start, and I think on a square heat Gussy will come out ahead.'

The National Statuary Hall.

E. W. BROWN.—Editor Columbia City Post: In the United States Statutes at large, in vol. 13, page 347, we find an act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses for the government, for the year ending June 30th, 1865, and in said act, Sec 2d, we find the following:

"The President is hereby authorized to invite each and all the States to provide and furnish statues in marble and bronze—not exceeding two in number for each State—of deceased persons who have been citizens thereof and illustrious for their historic renown, or from distinguished civil or military services, such as each State shall determine to be worthy of this national commemoration, and when so furnished, the same shall be placed in the Old Hall of the House of Representatives, in the capital of the United States, which is hereby set apart, or so much thereof as may be necessary, as a National Statuary Hall for the purpose herein indicated."

Now, I would ask if it is not time for the people of the great State of Indiana to act upon that grand and munificent privilege which Congress has so liberally granted. Other States have acted, and are now represented by marble and bronze statutes, and more are acting. Indiana has had distinguished citizens, and why not be represented? We are as near ready as we will ever be. Now is the time to talk up this great an important question, and have it acted upon by the meeting of the next Legislature. Who will be these men first and formost of Indiana's distinguished sons.

F. M. McDONALD.

But few are aware of the existence of the Statute above recited by our correspondent, or that a portion of the magnificent Capitol building of the United States is "set apart as a National Statuary Hall," wherein each State can commemorate in marble or bronze its illustrious names made eminent in the service of the State. The cultivation of State pride is the surest safeguard against centralization of power in one despotic head. Every citizen of Indiana feels a just pride in the achievements and services of our statesmen and military heroes who have carved themselves high up in the Temple of Fame. For be it remembered that Indiana has many such, whose services in a civic and military capacity make their talents and laurels household treasures to every Indianian. In all ages to the present, a grateful people have commemorated the memory of their great dead in statuary and monuments. Our State has yet to act in this matter. Let it be done so far at least as the National Statuary Hall affords the opportunity. The Post desires to hear from the press of the State upon the subject.—Columbia City Post.

WICKED JIM.

A TEMPERANCE RHAPSODY.

There were maidens ancient and gaunt and grim,
And maidens of fairer face;
There were angular women, with optics dim,
And women with eyes ablaze;
There were men with soap-locks and am'rous leer,
And men out at elbows and knees—
[The shepherds were those of such goodly cheer,
And the drunkards reformed were these.]

Besieged the saloon of "The Laden Vine"
Of a wicked old sinner called Jim,
And they ranged themselves up in a dolorous line
And they sang him a dolorous hymn:
"You're a sinner," they sang, "you're a naughty old man,
For your wickedness you must atone;
You're a toper terrific; you're under a ban."
[And the shepherds came in with a groan.]

Their faces were long as the moral law
And their meter was longer still,
With tireless lungs and tireless jaw,
They sang with a right good will:
"You're a brand to be plucked, you're a sheep astray,
But there's hope for the sinner yet;
Reform and return to a better way,
And a sweeter reward you'll get."

And the hardened sinner whose name was Jim,
The hero of "The Laden Vine,"
Was melted to tears by the warning hymn,
And he emptied the rosy wine
And the yellow rum and the pearly gin,
Rare Bourbon and Old Rye,
From cask and bottle and crowded bin
In the gutter lying by.

He closed the doors of his wicked ken,
He silenced his jeering laugh,
And donned a sober garb and then
Had taken his photograph,
Which he sold abroad, and the "wickedest man"
Abundance of money made,
And now he works on the moral plan
And is fully convinced it's paid.

He has upright views and a store of pelf,
And soberly walks a crack,
A bummer no more; he's a shepherd himself—
Round belly and spreading back—
A shining light unto those who fall—
[No better 'twixt here and Home]—
He tipples no more abroad at all,
But relies on a jug at home!

MAXIMUS.

I hold him great who, for Love's sake,
Can give with generous, earnest will;
Yet he who takes for Love's sweet sake,
I think I hold more generous still.

I bow before the noble mind
That freely some great wrong forgives;
Yet nobler is the one forgiven,
Who bears that burden well and lives.

It may be hard to gain, and still
To keep a lowly, steadfast heart;
Yet he who loses has to fill
A harder and a truer part.

Glorious it is to wear the crown
Of a deserved and a pure success;
He who knows how to fail has won
A crown whose luster is not less.

Great may he be who can command
And rule with just and tender sway;
Yet is diviner wisdom taught
Better by him who can obey.

Blessed are those who die for God,
And earn the martyr's crown of light;
Yet he who lives for God may be
A greater conqueror in his sight.

AUNT SARAH'S GHOST.

"It's all very well to laugh at ghosts and spirits," said Aunt Sarah, looking solemnly at us, "but, my dears, there are more things in this world than you know of."

"That's from Shakespeare, Aunt Sarah."

"Suppose it is?" replied the old lady, adjusting her cap; "it's true, nevertheless."

"Oh, it's quite true; but did you ever really see a ghost?" we asked, all anxiety to hear her strange experience."

"I've seen a ghost," answered Aunt Sarah, slowly, "just as plainly as I see you now."

"Oh, how dreadful!" we all exclaimed. "Tell us about it, Aunt Sarah." And we drew our chairs closer around the table, and wondered if Thomas wasn't coming soon to light the gas.

Aunt Sarah smiled upon us with the conscious superiority of wisdom, but, well pleased to be the center of so attractive a circle, put aside her knitting and commenced as follows:

"A great many years ago I was staying with a number of other guests, at a friend's house in the country. Among the various people, old and young, who were gathered there, was a maiden lady of rather mature age; in fact, she ought long ago to have taken her degree as a confirmed old maid. Some people so dread the approach of age that they cling to the semblance of youth almost with the tenacity of despair. Miss Biglow—that was her name—was one of this kind; and so, by the aid of paint, powder and false hair, she really made herself look twenty years younger than what we knew to be her actual age. It was even whispered that her cheeks owed their seeming plumpness to some mysterious cause not attributable to nature. Now, girls," said Aunt Sarah, pausing for a moment, and looking sternly upon us, "I hate this deception, and hope none of you paint, or powder, or wear false hair."

"Goodness, Aunt Sarah! You don't think we wear false hair, do you?" cried Bessie Gray, putting up her hand to ascertain if her chignon was in its right place.

"I am sure I don't know, my dear, but I hope not. Well, one day an elderly gentleman arrived at the house, intending to spend a week in fishing, hunting, or idling about, as most of us were doing. This gentleman was very rich, and avowedly looking for a wife. Under these circumstances it is not surprising that he at once became the lion of the day.

"The evening on which he arrived saw Miss Biglow painted and powdered to the verge of distraction—wherever that may be—and looking, to an unpracticed eye, almost girlish.

"It was really wonderful, my dears, to see how the eligible bachelor—Mr. Goodman—took to her from the first. We really became afraid that she would carry off a prize for which so many blushing young ladies had angled in vain.

"Miss Biglow seldom came down stairs in the morning, and when she ventured out always wore a thick veil to protect her skin, which she said was very tender indeed. Of course we knew the reason, but Mr. Goodman, like all other men, was as blind as a bat, and as easily taken in by a woman as any child would be. It would not have been fair for us to undeceive him, you know, for I think women ought to respect each other's little secrets."

"Honor among thieves," murmured Bessie.

"My dear, that is not a pretty simile," said Aunt Sarah, gravely. "But let me go on with my story. One evening we were all sitting at the open window, in the moonlight, and, by some means or other, the conversation turned upon the habit of wearing false hair, and other deceptions of a like nature.

"'I never want to marry a woman who would wash out like a cotton umbrella in the first shower,' said Mr. Goodman.

"'I quite agree with you,' answered Miss Biglow. 'It must be dreadful to use all those things that you were talking about.'

"Mr. Goodman glanced approvingly toward her, but Gertie Edmonds pinched my arm and whispered,

"'I'll bet a pair of gloves that she won't stand washing.'

"I'd like to try it," I answered.

"Girls are always thoughtless and foolish," said Aunt Sarah, sagely, "and I was no exception to the rule. That speech of Mr. Goodman's suggested a wicked thought to Gertie Edmonds, it was that we should all go out in the boat next day, taking, if possible, Miss Biglow with us; and when in quite shallow water, manage to upset the boat."

"And then," said Gertie, "it would be such fun to see the paint wash off her face."

"I regret to say, my dears, that I entered into this wicked joke with a hearty good will, but was repaid for my share in it by what happened afterward, as you will see by and by."

"At first Miss Biglow absolutely refused to go on the water at all, but by Mr. Goodman's earnest solicitations she at last consented to make one of the party. Besides Mr. Goodman there were two other young gentlemen, cousins of Gertie's, and I need scarcely tell you that they entered with delight into our plot against the unfortunate Miss Biglow.

"Next day we dressed ourselves as plainly as possible, not caring to ruin our best things by our contemplated ducking in the lake. Everything went on as well as could be wished, and we pushed out gently from the shore, with our unsuspecting victim on board. We had agreed to row along the shore to a place where we girls sometimes went in bathing, and then, at a given signal, manage to upset the boat.

"Mr. Goodman was whispering some soft nonsense into Miss Biglow's ear, when Harry Edmonds gave the preconcerted signal, and we all leaned over at once to pick a water-lily. Over went the boat, and in an instant everybody was floundering about in three feet of water. A terrific scream from Miss Biglow, some violent splashing and trembling on the part of Mr. Goodman, and then we saw him rescue her bodily from the water, and carry her triumphantly to the shore in his arms.

"We followed without delay, and found Mr. Goodman sitting on the bank, gazing in direct dismay at the object he had so gallantly carried to shore. Poor Miss Biglow did not look prepossessing; and the two rude young cousins of Gertie's burst out laughing when they saw her, which was very unkind and thoughtless of them."

"Did you laugh, Aunt Sarah?" we asked.

"Well, my dears, laughing is very contagious, and I could not help joining in. She sat on a stone, looking, as that naughty Gertie said, just like an ancient mermaid, just risen from the sea. In the struggle her hat had come off, taking with it the wealth of hair which had been Mr. Goodman's especial delight. In its place was a tight little knot with a wiry wisp of hair stretching out at right angles, and asserting itself in a most obtrusive manner. But her face represented the most astonishing change, for the paint had been washed into stripes and patches, and the cheek which had rested upon her cavalier's shoulder was quite white, while the other was a stripy red color, very peculiar indeed. For some reason she had not spoken a word since reaching the shore, but sat with her handkerchief to her mouth, looking about her with an expression of intense anxiety.

"Harry had fished up her hat with all the back hair hanging to it, and now presented it to her on the end of a stick. The position was too ludicrous, and we burst out laughing in her very face. At first she looked at the hair in a bewildered sort of way, not seeming to understand what we were laughing at; then putting up her hand felt the little top knot at the back of her head; as she did so, the whole horrible truth flashed upon her; and she sprang to her feet trembling with fury.

"Vipers!" she said; and we saw that she hadn't a tooth in her head. "Scorpions!" And, without taking her back hair with her, she fled toward the house.

We all followed, inwardly wondering what she would do and whether she really thought we upset the boat intentionally. She did not appear at dinner, so our hostess went up-stairs, and was closeted with her for about an hour; when she came down we fancied she looked rather gravely at us, but "guilty conscience," you know, and we began to feel very guilty.

"Will you come down to the lake with me, Sarah," she said.

"Goodness, Gertie!" I answered. "It's almost 12 o'clock, and what do you want to go there for?"

"I must go," she said, determinedly. "You never noticed it, but I lost all my back hair in those nasty rushes, and must get it to-night; I fastened the veil over the back of my head, so you did not see it going."

Of course I went with her, and, creeping out of the house by a back door, we ran, hand in hand, down the dark patch to the lake, and soon reached the spot so fatal to Miss Biglow's hopes. As we stood for a moment silently watching the moonbeams on the water, a tall figure, robed in white, rushed out of the bushes into the water at our feet. My blood froze within me, and I almost fell to the ground.

"What is it?" I asked, in a low, terrified whisper, clutching hold of Gertie.

"A ghost!" she answered, her teeth chattering as she spoke. "Oh, what shall we do?"

The spectral figure turned round just then, and, seeing us standing on the shore, stretched out both arms and came toward us as quickly as possible. At the same moment the moon was hidden by a cloud, and we were in total darkness. Gertie gave a piercing scream, and fled with the desperation of despair toward the house, followed by myself as quickly as possible; every moment I fancied that dreadful thing would spring out from behind some dark cluster of evergreens, and clutch me with its ghostly hands.

We reached our rooms at last, and bolting the door I threw myself on the bed, half dead with terror.

Next morning we resolved not to say anything about our adventure, lest we should be laughed at; but our nervous, startled manner, and pale faces showed that something had happened.

"Oh, Sarah!" whispered Gertie, coming to me after breakfast, and, speaking to me in an awe-struck voice, said "she's gone."

"Who's gone," I asked.

"Miss Biglow; no one has seen her since last night; and we saw her ghost."

Gertie shuddered and trembled violently.

We found it really so. Miss Biglow had disappeared, and no one knew where she had gone. We hunted high and low, but found not the slightest trace of her, and Gertie and I came to the conclusion that she had drowned herself, and that we saw her spirit that night on the banks of the lake.

Harry told Gertie that our hostess knew where she had gone, and that Miss Biglow left a note explaining her sudden departure, and blaming us for the whole affair. Of course we knew better, and to this day I am convinced that she drowned herself, and that we saw her ghost.

"What nonsense, Aunt Sarah. She was probably looking for her false teeth, or something else; and besides, how could you tell that it was Miss Biglow at all?"

"I recognized her at once by the little top-knot on the back of her head, with the wisp of hair sticking out."

"Oh, it wasn't a ghost at all, Aunt Sarah."

"My dears, I knew you would laugh at me, but I have lived long enough to know a ghost when I see it. I hope, my dears, that this may be a warning to you all not to improve your good looks by wicked artifices. Give me my knitting, Bessie, and ring for lights."

Useful Hints for the Home Circle.

Catarrh, it is asserted, can be helped if not cured, by snuffing up Castile soap scraped very fine.

The best permanent shade for glass-plant houses is linseed oil and sugar of lead, in the proportion of about a teaspoonful of lead to a quart of oil; but the exact trial must be governed by the amount of shade required, which can easily be proved by trying it upon pieces of waste glass. First, wash the glass thoroughly clean, and then on a dry, clear morning, take the oil mixture, and paint as thinly as possible over the glass with an ordinary paint-brush. By dabbing it gently with a dry brush it will impart to it the appearance of ground glass. The shading will stand for a season, and can be removed by washing it with strong pearlash water.

The correct management of the nails is to cut them of an oval shape, corresponding with the shape of the fingers. Never allow them to grow too long as it makes it difficult to keep them clean; nor too short, as it causes the tips of the fingers to become flattened and enlarged, and turn upward, which gives the hand an awkward appearance. The skin which grows in a semi-circle on the top of the nail requires much attention, as it is often drawn on with its growth, dragging the skin below the nail so tight as to cause it to divide into what are termed agnails. This is to be prevented by separating the skin from the nail by a blunt half-circular instrument. Many persons cut this pellicle, or thin skin, which causes it to grow very thick and uneven, and sometimes damages the growth of the nail.

The following is one of the best applications we know of in cases of burns or scalds, more especially where a large surface is denuded of the skin. Take one dram of finely powdered alum, and mix thoroughly with the whites of two eggs and one teacup of fresh lard; spread on a cloth and apply to the parts burnt. It gives almost instant relief from pain, and, by excluding the air, prevents inflammatory action. The application should be changed at least once a day.

In Belgium and Holland linen is prepared beautifully, because the washerwomen use refined borax instead of soda, as a washing powder. One large handful of borax is used to every ten gallons of water, and the saving of soap is said to be one half. For laces and cambrics an extra quantity is used. Borax does not injure the linen, and softens the hardest water. A teaspoonful of borax added to an ordinary sized kettle of hard water, in which it is allowed to boil, will effectually soften the water.

When you receive a bouquet, sprinkle it lightly with cold water, then put it in a vessel containing some soap-suds which nourish the roots, and keep the flowers as good as new. Take the bouquet out of the suds every morning, and lay it sideways in fresh water, the stock entering first into the water; keep it there a minute or two, then take it out, and sprinkle the flowers lightly by the hand with pure water. Replace the flowers in the soap-suds, and they will bloom freshly.

A New Kind of Crusading.

The St. Louis Globe has a letter from Mount Vernon, Ill., which gives an account of a new kind of crusading practiced in that town. Mrs. S. S. Wilson, accompanied by her sister-in-law, Mrs. Thomas Watson, went to Shepherd's drug store and demanded a prescription upon which her husband had procured liquor. Mr. Shepherd being absent, his clerk told her that she would have to see Dr. Porter and get him to revoke the prescription. Mrs. Wilson, regarding this an evasion, drew a revolver from her muff, told the clerk that if he didn't give up the prescription she would blow his brains out, and presented her pistol at his head in a state of great excitement. A parley was had, however, and Mrs. Wilson was finally induced to call on Dr. Porter, which she did with her drawn weapon, and obtained his speedy revocation of the prescription. The ladies then marched to Johnson's saloon and Shepherd's drug store, and with presented arms gave them their orders, after which they went home, much to the relief of all the doctors and saloonists of the town.

The Delusions of Drink.

There are men who honestly believe that alcoholic drink is good for them, yet there is no one of them who would touch it except as a prescribed medicine if it were not for its pleasant taste. The delusion touching its healthfulness grows out of the desire to justify an appetite which may either be natural or acquired. If a man likes whisky or wine he likes to think that it is good for him, and he will take some pains to prove that it is so, both to himself and others. Now, alcohol is a pure stimulant. There is not so much nutriment in it as there is in a chip. It never added anything to the permanent forces of life, and never can add anything. Its momentary intensification of force is a permanent abstraction of force from the drinker's capital stock. All artificial excitements bring exhaustion. The physicians know this, and the simplest man's reason is quite capable of comprehending it. If any man supposes that daily drink, even in small quantities, is conducive to his health, he is deluded.—Scribner's.

STATISTICS show that of the thousands who die annually a large proportion are destroyed, not by old age, or by the natural exhaustion of vitality, but through intemperance, or disregard, either on the part of the sufferer or his parents, of the simplest laws of nature. Such being the case—and figures cannot misrepresent facts—the conclusion is that were the causes of intemperance, its kindred vices, and a disregard of natural laws, removed, the average length of the human lifetime would be extended proportionately. What agent mot rapidly, harmlessly, and certainly will eradicate these vices, or the tendency to them? is the question which has been as thoroughly and persistently agitated as has the search for the Philosopher's stone. The discovery has been made by Dr. Joseph Walker, whose widely-known VINEGAR BITTERS are accomplishing wonders which the old-fogy doctors never dreamed of. Bronchitis.

This is an irritation or inflamation of the bronchial tubes which carry the air we breathe into the lungs. It arises from a cold settled in the throat, from Catarrh extending to these parts, from scrofulous affections, and from severe use of the voice. The irritation from this latter cause commences in the larynx and gloffs, which are the organs of the voice, and, extending downward, produces hoarseness, coughing and spitting mucous matter, sometimes mixed with blood. It is chiefly dangerous from its tendency to spread into the lungs, and terminate in consumption. It is in the cure of severe and obstinate cases of this disease that Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has achieved unparalleled success, and won the loudest praise from all who have used it.

Eruptions, Fever Sores, Scald Head, Ring Worm, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Acne, Black Spots, Worms in the Flesh, Tumors, Cancers in the Womb, and all weakening and painful discharges, Night Sweats, Loss of Sperm and all wastes of the life principle, are within the curative range of this wonder of Modern Chemistry, and a few days' use will prove to any person using it for either of these forms of disease its potent power to cure them.

If the patient, daily becoming reduced by the wastes and decomposition that is continually progressing, succeeds in arresting these wastes, and repairs the same with new material made from healthy blood—and this the SARSAPARILLIAN will and does secure—a cure is certain; for when once this remedy commences its work of purification, and succeeds in diminishing the loss of wastes, its repairs will be rapid, and every day the patient will feel himself growing better and stronger, the food digesting better, appetite improving, and flesh and weight increasing.

WISHART'S PINE TREE TAR CORDIAL

Nature's Great Remedy FOR ALL THROAT AND LUNG DISEASES!!

It is the vital principle of the Pine Tree, obtained by a peculiar process in the distillation of the tar, by which its highest medicinal properties are retained. Tar even in its crude state has been recommended by eminent physicians of every school. It is confidently offered to the afflicted for the following simple reasons:

1. IT CURES,—not by abruptly stopping the cough—but by dissolving the phlegm and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter causing the irritation. In cases of seated CONSUMPTION it both prolongs and renders less burdensome the life of the afflicted sufferer.

2. Its healing principle acts upon the irritated surface of the lungs, penetrating to each diseased part, relieving pain, and subduing inflammation.

3. IT PURIFIES AND ENRICHES THE BLOOD. Positively curing all humors, from the common PIMPLE or ERUPTION to the severest cases of Scrofula. Thousands of affidavits could be produced from those who have felt the beneficial effects of PINE TREE TAR CORDIAL in the various diseases arising from IMPURITIES OF THE BLOOD.

4. It invigorates the digestive organs and restores the appetite.

All who have known or tried Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's remedies require no references from us, but the names of thousands cured by them can be given to any one who doubts our statement. Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Great American Dyspepsia Pills and WORM SUGAR DROPS have never been equalled. For sale by all Druggists and Storekeepers, and at Nutritive Value of Food.

The proportionate values of the following materials used for feeding farm stock are gathered from the published analyses by the most eminent agricultural chemists, and have been corroborated by the results of eminent English feeders. They include the relative flesh-forming, fattening and total feeding values of the different articles mentioned, and are probably the most trustworthy information that can be gathered from all sources at the present time. They are as follows, the equal weight of each being considered:

Food.	Flesh producing.	Fat producing.	Total.
Turnips	1	6	7
Rutabagas	1	7	9
Carrots	1	7	10
Mangels	2	8	12
Straw	3	16	22
Potatoes	2	17	22
Brewers' grains	6½	18	25
Hay (early cut)	8	51	64
Millet (seed)	8	76	85
Buckwheat	9	61	69
Malt	9	76	81
Rye	11	72	86
Oats	12	68	78
Corn	12	52	80
Wheat and barley	12	66	82
Dried brewers' grains	16	67	82
Beans (English field)	22	46	74
Peas	22	61	79
Linseed	25	112	92
Cotton seed cake	24	46½	61
Linseed cake	28	56	73
Bran and coarse millstuff	31	54	76

In these estimates the flesh-forming value is in proportion to the nitrogenious elements contained in the food. The fat-formers consist of starch, oil and fat, and, as oil and ready-formed fat is estimated at double the value of starch in feeding, the total feeding values in different articles vary in somewhat different ratios to those of the fat-forming elements.

Fashion Notes.

STRIPED alpacas are in market, and make up handsomely.

PATENT leather shoes for ladies are slowly coming into fashion.

CHINESE sunshades are of white canvas with curious trimming.

THOSE back braids lately so fashionable are now used to stuff sofa cushions.

JET stars are now worn by the ladies, suspended from a bit of black velvet around the neck.

THE handsomest spring suits are of black silk embroidered on skirt and waist with the finest black jet beads.

LARGE bows of gros grain ribbon are used as trimming on some of the new bonnets, stuck up high on the left side.

THE bonnets come "flat down" on top of the head now, exactly opposite to the flaring style throughout the winter.

A NEW fashion among the ladies is to wear in the street a long veil of real thread lace with handsome border.

GRAY steel silk suits trimmed with a darker shade of gray embroidery and steel beads are new and very stylish.

BLACK grenadine suits are trimmed on the waist and front breadth with stripes of black ribbon instead of velvet which was so fashionable during the winter season.

THE skirts of spring suits are trimmed with one deep ruffle, as the long overskirt will not admit of much trimming. The waists are made to hold considerable trimming.

Humors of Advertising.

As a general rule, advertisers who write their own wishes, make them rather ambiguous in their meaning. The Centennial gets off a few of these, thus:

Somebody wants "a young man, to look after a horse of the Methodist persuasion."

"One pound reward. Lost; a cameo brooch, representing Venus and Adonis on the Drumcondra road, about ten o'clock on Tuesday evening."

"To be sold, cheap; a male phaeton, the property of a gentleman with a movable head, as good as new."

"Ten shillings reward! Lost by a lady, a white terrier dog, except the head, which is black. To be brought," etc.

To these Irish advertisements may be added an English one, which was the subject of a humorous article in the Saturday Review some four or five years since:

"To be sold, a grand piano, the property of a lady about to travel in a walnut wood case with carved legs."

A Ratskin Costume.

An ingenious individual of Liskeard, Cornwall, has been exhibiting himself in a dress composed from top to toe of ratskins, which he has been collecting for three years and a half. The dress was made entirely by himself; it consists of hat, neckerchief, coat, waistcoat, trousers, tippet, gaiters and shoes. The number of rats required to complete the suit was 620; and the individual, when thus dressed, appears exactly like one of the Esquimaux described in the travels of Parry and Ross. The tippet or boa is composed of the pieces of skin immediately around the tails of the rats, and is a very curious part of the dress, containing about 600 tails, and those of the shortest.

TO THOSE WHO DRAW NOTES.—A man drew a note promising to pay one hundred dollars. He used a printed form, and did not close up the blank devoted to dollars, and after passing it as negotiable paper somebody inserted "and fifty" after the one hundred and before the printed dollars. The note, thus altered, got into the hands of an innocent party, who presented it to the drawer, and the Supreme Court decided that the maker of the note was liable for its face, because through negligence he did not draw a line between the written word "hundred" and the printed word "dollars." Any testimony that the drawer might offer to establish the fact that he gave a note for one hundred dollars must go for nothing, as "there was nothing on the face of the note showing that it had been altered." Evidence of an alteration on the face of the note would have changed the case. Let this be a lesson to all drawers of promissory notes. No one can be too careful in such matters.

ALEXANDER MITCHELL, M. C., from Wisconsin, is reputed to be worth $20,000,000, and to be the wealthiest man in the West. He is a native of Scotland, and made most of his money by banking.

Nonplusing a Barber.

Persons who visit barber shops would give a premium for a barber who would not insist upon them having their "hair cut," or submitting to a "shampoo" when they only wish to be shaved. A man who called to-day at a tonsorial establishment on Smithfield street succeeded in nonplusing a most persistent knight of the razor. The barber insisted upon giving the transient customer a "shampoo," and the T. C. peremptorily demanded why such a request was made. Then a little colloquy ensued something like this:

Barber—"Your head is very dirty, sah!"

T. C.—"Well, I know it is, and I want it dirty."

Barber—"Want it dirty! Why, what fah?"

T. C.—"Well, I'm a Granger, and I want to have soil on my head!"

The barber ceased his importunings, and quietly shaved his man.—Pittsburgh Chronicle.

Sturdy Old Men.

There are some pretty old men in the world who remain full of work and ambition. Lord John Russell, for instance—who looks upon Disraeli, who is 69 years of age, as a sort of a boy—is 82 years old, and yet seeks to rule England. The Emperor William, a man of 77, and the Duke, still older, are having a lively contest. Guizot, aged 87, is working away at his literary labors in France, while Thiers, but little his junior, is ready to assume the reigns of the Government whenever he is wanted. Coming over to America we find men seventy and over, working away like men of forty. There are Commodore Vanderbilt, Daniel Drew, A. T. Stewart, J. Edgar Thompson and W. B. Astor, still skillfully handling their millions, and yearly adding to them. There is William C. Bryant producing in his eighth decade a comprehensive history of the United States. There is Thurlow Weed still dropping on us from time to time words of wisdom and old political reminiscences.

THE PRINCE IMPERIAL.—Prince Louis Napoleon, or Napoleon IV., as he is called by his most ardent supporters, was eighteen years of age on the 16th of March last, and thus, according to the law of the Empire, has attained his majority. In his early childhood he was a very delicate child, and not until he had passed his eleventh year did his prospect of reaching manhood become at all flattering. He was carefully instructed during his father's reign in such studies as that astute man regarded as best adapted to fit him for the duty of ruling over a military empire, and his soldierly qualities were displayed on the field of Saarbruck, where his coolness formed the subject of a bulletin which has since been so fruitful a source of ridicule. After the battle of Sedan the Prince escaped to Belgium and thence to England, where he soon entered the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich. He has since steadily pursued his studies at the latter place, and at the recent examination stood at the head of his class.

HOW TO SELECT FLOUR.—Look at its color; if it is white, with a slightly yellowish or straw colored tint, it is a good sign. If it is very white, with a bluish cast with white specks in it, the flour is not good. Examine its adhesiveness—wet and knead a little of it between the fingers; if it works dry and elastic it is good; if it works soft and sticky it is poor. Flour made from spring wheat is likely to be sticky. Throw a little lump of dry flour against a dry, smooth, perpendicular surface; if it adheres in a lump the flour has life in it; if it falls like powder it is bad. Squeeze some of the flour in your hands; if it retain the shape given by the pressure, that too is a good sign. Flour that will stand all these tests it is safe to buy. These modes were given by old flour dealers, and we make no apology for printing them, as they pertain to a matter that concerns everybody, namely, the quality of that which is "the staff of life."

In 1866 the number of marriages was	30,479
In 1867	29,230
In 1868	28,231
In 1869	23,910
In 1870	25,459
In 1871	24,627
In 1872	26,303
In 1873	23,469

This is far from encouraging. Here we we see that with certainly a quarter of a million less population, there were 7,000 more marriages in 1866 than in 1873. In 1860 there was one marriage to every 101 of the population; in 1866, one to every 82; but in 1873, the marriages had fallen off to one in every 118.—Inter-Ocean.

THE CHICAGO RIVER.—This go-ahead city spent some $3,000,000 a few years ago in turning back the current of the Chicago river and making it a tributary of the Mississippi instead of the St. Lawrence. The Board of Trade is now considering a proposal to fill up the part going through the city and substitute therefor a huge covered sewer. Bridges and tunnels are found to be insufficient for the immense and growing vehicular and pedestrian traffic.

WAUKESHA WATER,

MINERAL ROCK SPRING,

CURES

Dropsy, Gravel, Constipation, Diabetes, Dyspepsia, Jaundice, Bright's Disease, and all diseases of the liver and kidneys. This water is now known and sold as a remedy for the above diseases, in all parts of the world. It is truly wonderful what effect it has upon the human system. It is now being shipped at the following prices:

Barrel, 40 gal., $12; half do, $7; demijohn and jugs, 50 cents per gal., package extra; bottles (qts.) $2.50 per doz. Money must accompany the order, except to our regular authorized agent. Inquire of your druggist for Waukesha Mineral Rock Spring Water. Address C. C. OLIN & CO., Waukesha, Wis., for orders for the water or for circulars.

CINCINNATI, June 11, 1873.

C. C. OLIN & CO., Waukesha, Wis.: Having used your water from the Mineral Rock Spring, Waukesha, Wis., for the diabetes, I have found great relief from the use of the same. Before I commenced using this water, my physician reported to me the specific gravity of my urine was 31, and after using it for twenty days the specific gravity of the urine was reduced to 21, showing a great improvement, and finding great relief in not being compelled to urinate so frequently. I had other waters, but give it as my opinion that the Mineral Rock Spring is preferable. And I do earnestly recommend it to all who are afflicted with the disease commonly known as Diabetes.

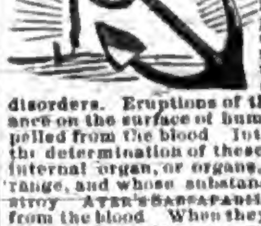
Respectfully yours, ALFRED WILSON, Dept. Coll. Int. Rev., No. 8 W. Third Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

HUDSON, Wis., May 7, 1873.

MESSRS. C. C. OLIN & CO.—Dear Sirs: In testimony of the great value of Mineral Rock Spring Water for those suffering with disease of the kidneys, I would state that I had been suffering for months with diabetes, passing large quantities of urine, heavy with sugar, and tormented with a distressing thirst, gradually losing flesh and strength and finally the use of my lower limbs, which became almost devoid of feeling. My physicians gave me up, and said that I had but a short time to live. I had lost all hopes of recovery, when I was induced to use Mineral Rock Spring Water, and since then I have gradually regained the use of my limbs, and also gained strength and flesh. It has done for me what medical skill could not do. I am thankful for returning health, and my prayer is that it may prove to others afflicted with kidney affections as great a blessing as it has been to myself. Yours truly, MRS. JAMES SANDERS.

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA,

FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.



This compound of the vegetable alteratives, Sarsaparilla, Dock, Stillingia and Mandrake with the Iodides of Potassium and Iron makes a most effectual cure of a series of complaints which are very prevalent and afflicting. It purifies the blood, purges out the lurking humors in the system, that undermine health and settle into troublesome disorders. Eruptions of the skin are the appearance on the surface of humors that should be expelled from the blood. Internal derangements are the determination of these same humors to some internal organ, or organs, whose action they derange, and whose substance they disease and destroy. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA expels these humors from the blood. When they are gone, the disorders they produce disappear, such as Ulcerations of the Liver, Stomach, Kidneys, Lungs, Eruptions and Eruptive Diseases of the Skin, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter and Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Ulcers and Sores, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Pain in the Bones, Side and Head, Female Weakness, Sterility, Leucorrhœa arising from internal ulceration and uterine disease, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Emaciation and General Debility. With their departure health returns.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, April 30th, 1874

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company declared a semiannual dividend of five per cent. on the stock of the main line and the Washington branch.

Gov. Hendricks, in a recent speech delivered in Inpianapolis, said: "Officers of a municipal corporation should be chosen for their honesty, integrity and devotion to the public interests, and for the fitness for the place." The Indianapolis Journal, the central Republican organ, calls this a demagogical declaration. Strange.

Poor General Grant. He is catching it on all sides. The Boston and New York delegations complain that he snubbed them, and now that he has vetoed the inflation bill, the other side will swear that he has been playing double. But then, you know. Mr. Greeley could never have been trusted in the chair!

The New York Times and Sun are promising Tweed to labor in behalf of his immediate release is he will only tell what he knows about municipal corruption. Tweed is half inclined to accede to the flattering proposition, it is said, and a good many of the politicians are studying the advertisements of the Trans-Atlantic and South American steamships.

It is said that eighty thousand Mennonites, of Russia, will emigrate to this country and Canada within the next two or three months. They are of German origin, and a sober, industrious and religious people. They leave Russia because they are hostile to bearing arms and that government has wisely consented to their peaceable emigration.

"When," asked a philosophic observer in Washington of a lobbyist of long experience, and extensive information—"When may the present universal development of corruption be said to have begun here?"

"It began," answered the lobbyist, "When members of Congress saw that President Grant took money, and made presents given to himself and reason for his official action."

Reports show the most tremendous "leaks"—as Mr. Dawes calls them—in the mail service. They are more properly called steals. Contracts to carry mails where scarcely anybody lives are let out by the Post master General to political favorites at enormous prices—sometimes to double and thribble the amount necessary to carry the mails. For example take the route from Kelton, on the Central Pacific railroad, to Walla-Walla, in Washington Territory. Here we have two points of no importance, connected by a path through a howling wilderness, enjoying a daily mail, for which this precious Creswell has paid $224,000 dollars annually. This was a star contract, made by the department after the regular four years' contract was let, and was not open to bids.

Again, take the daily mail route from the Central Pacific railroad to Boise City, Idaho, for which the Government pays $77,000 annually, with the contract given out the same way as the other.

Again, we have the tri-weekly mail from Walla-Walla to Messonon, Montana, throuh a wilderness, with a bridle path or an Indian trail as the only route, for which service the department pays $66,000 annually. There is not a man, woma, or missionary at either end or along the route demanding a mail or able to use it when brought. The contract was awarded as the others, without bids, and could have been made for ten thousand a year to men who would have grown rich upon it at that.

And for these three contracts for mail service in the same Territory, that numbers not more that twelve thousand inhabitants, our gorgeous Creswell pays $336,000 a a year. The postage collected for the whole territory amounts to only $28,324.44, which leaves a deficit of $387,000 paid by the people for daily and tri-weekly mails through the wilderness, where wolves, Indians and outlaws are the only inhabitants and fat contractors the only people benefited. But these fat contractors are fat contributors towards the support of the Republican party. They furnish the sinews of war as did one Nesbit through Hon. Schuyler Colfax.

Mr. Grant's peculiar propensity to favor schemes of plunder received a fresh illustration on yesterday. The Pennsylvania beggars, who visited the capital for the purpose of making a raid on the Treasury for the benefit of their pet centennial scheme, received but little encouragement from the members of Congress, who have, singularly enough, come in regard the matter as an unmitigated steal. They at once betook them to the white house, where Mr. Grant was interviewed and at once flew to their relief. He indited a special message to Congress commending the spoliation to the tender care of the members. As the fact is acknowledged on all hands that even an indorsement of the enterprise by Congress would involve an ultimate expenditure of six or seven million dollars, it is doubtful if even the indorsement of the President will save the measure from the fate that ought to meet it.

Another startling exposure of the District ring was brought out in the investigation last week. A Chicago paving ring took a large contract, amounting to $196,000 of what is called the DeGolyer No. 2 block pavement. The price per yard was fixed at $3.50, and the blocks were to undergo a process called "ironizing." After they had got on there with their materials, which did not cost the contractors but $1.50 per yard, ready laid an employe of the company, by the name of Quimby, gave information to Gov. Shepherd that the whole thing was a fraud—that it had been tested in Chicago and found to be devoid of any merit as a paving material, and that he communicated this information to save the taxpayers of Washington from being swindled. Gov Shepherd ordered the contract rescinded. But the contractors procured the services of the Hon. Charles B. Farwell, member of Congress, to see Gov. Shepherd and allow them to use up the $60,000 worth of materials on hand, and they would consent to give up the contract. The Hon Charles went to Washington, and at his request Gov. Shepherd consented that the $60,000 worth should be put down, and it is now rotted out in places since September last, and is declared to be a complete swindle.

THE PRESIDENT'S VETO.

The veto by the President of the Currency Bill which had passed Congress by good majorities and which provided for a further increase of our currency, seems not to have been generally anticipated by the country at large, while the east was united against inflation, there seemed to be a desire in the west for an increase. There is no doubt but that we need more money in the west, and if the east could be made yield up part of the great volume she seems to be favored with we could get along. The east was against inflation because she had all the money she wanted while the west was for it because she needed more. What will be the result of this veto we are not in a position to know, but hope that it will be for our best interests, though on general principles we doubt it as it would be the first act of the President since in office to result in this way. He is receiving many severe criticisms from both sides. The Cincinnati Enquirer says:

The President's veto of the Currency Bill completes the disruption of the Republican party. Though a Western man he has proved treacherous to the interests of his section. Though pre-eminently a candidate of the people, never having commanded even the respect of men of both culture and honesty, he has thwarted the will of the people. Proclaiming entering the White House, that he would have no policy to enforce against the will of the people, he has violated that pledge with the most obvious shamelessness. He has shown himself to be a tool of the money sharks. They went to him in a pinch and said: "We want more money," and he gave it to them. Twenty-five States said to Grant: "We want more money;" and Wall street and State street said: "Dont let 'em have it;" and he didn't. Grant is a pliant creature of the men of money. More than two thirds of his party are opposed to him. But he will be the candidate of the capitalists for a third term. The people of the West and, regardless of previous party affiliations, will rally under the banner of the people, the Democratic standard, and presently their belief will become law.

The Lower House of Congress has passed the bill giving newspapers free circulation through the mails to the subscribers within the county in which the paper is published. Newspaper exchanges were also restored to the free list by the significant vote of 178 yeas to 41 nays. The Senate will hardly pass the bill unless members of Congress are relieved from paying postage-tax on their official correspondence.

Pioneer Sketches

—OF—

DeKALB COUNTY

NUMBER NINE.

And from thence struck across the woods, by means of a pocket compass, some fifteen or twenty miles, through the unbroken forest, to the St. Joseph river. When in the midst of the wilderness, they lost their needle from their compass, and had to hunt a considerable time among the leaves before they found it. Following the direction pointed out by the slender finger of their magnetic guide, about dark they struck the bluff of the St. Jo., about where Henry Robinson now lives, and from thence made their way, amid the gathering shades of evening, down the river, more than a mile, to within a few rods of where the cabin afterwards stood, spoken of in the Indian story, and in that of "the flood" in our last chapter.

Mr. Lytle then lived in the cabin over the river, and about forty rods back from it, and their object was to get over for supper and lodgings, as they had ate nothing since early breakfast. It was the 24th of December, and, when they reached the river they found it frozen in about one fourth of the breadth of the river, and no way of crossing; so they were under the necessity of camping out for the night. A huge walnut, perhaps, six feet in diameter, had been cut down probably by the Indians, and still lay with one end on the stump, at the time of "the flood," four years after the time of which we are now speaking. Under this walnut they took lodging for the night having first struck up a fire. The night was passed very uncomfortably, in acute suffering from cold and hunger. The next morning, (Christmas 1833,) they cut down a dry stump of a tree, (for they had their axes with them,) which broke in its fall. Tying the two parts together, side by side, with basswood bark, they launched it, breaking the ice at the margin and on it crossed the river with their imaginations filled with visions of a plentiful warm breakfast. On arriving at Mr. Lytle's, they found no one at home but the children, and nothing to eat, but a rabbit; and, while they were cooking this, a cat ran away with half of it. The Messrs Robinsons, had intended to enter land and make "a beginning" on it, but they found provisions so scarce that they returned the next day, and, in the following spring, Mr. Colin Robinson entered the excellent tract of land now owned by Jerry Andrews, just across the river from Orangeville, in Concord Township. He did not settle on it however, for three years afterwards.

It was perhaps in the summer of 1834 or 5, that John Platter and Solomon DeLong, crossed the same wilderness, and getting bewildered in the midst of it almost famished, for want of water, and had to camp for the night. With their axes and hands, they dug a hole in a prickly ash swamp, and found water, but it tasted so much like the decoction of gunpowder, that they could scarcely drink it, though suffering with thirst. The early settlers will bear me witness that quetoes in the summer, were no scarce article in that day of general scarcity. In fact they were as plenty as we can imagine flies to have been, in the 4th Egyptian plague. You could not stop two minutes in the woods, without having them, by myriads singing their unpleasant song with treble voices about your ears, or poking into you their tormenting bills, almost as much to be dreaded as the Doctors bills of the early day. Well, to protect themselves against these impudent serenaders, and to get rid of their presentations of their numberless bills put in the form of pressing duns, not for money, but for blood,—these unwilling lodgers of the wilderness cut bushes then covered with green leaves, and covered themselves deeply in these, until the mosquetoes were utterly at loss to know to get at them; and thus they passed the night.

In the winter of 1837-8, in the month of January, the above named Mr. Colin Robinson, having lately married a wife, set out on a bridal (or "bridle" as you please) tour from the Maumee, to a cabin built on his land on the St. Jo.—she on horse back and he on foot. Coming to the "Mer-del-arm," a considerable creek between the rivers—running thro' a broad cottonwood swamp—he found it swollen by recent rains and melted snow, until it spread over the swamps about a mile on each side. Through this wide-spread water he waded along the narrow trace, sometimes waist deep, and she followed on her horse. Coming to the main channel of the creek, he found it covered with thick ice, raised up several feet by the swollen waters,—so that the ice was nearly on a level with the horses breast, as he waded up to it. Here Mr. Robinson got his wife off the horse, on a stump; and prevailed on the horse to jump on the ice—walk over it and then jump down on the other side of the channel.

It doesn't bring much balm usually to the hearts of the distontented to be told by the old women of both sexes that their lot in life might be worse. Therefore it is not to be supposed that those who have been grumbling over the weather lately, will be any happier when they learn that in Boston Corners, New York, it stormed so on Saturday night that a train lay over for fear of being blown from the rails, and that at a railroad cut in the vicinity, the snow was four feet deep.

Congress enlivened the time Saturday by a very interesting review of how the departments squeeze money from the government. Mr. Garfield thought the attorney general should have a carriage, and Mr. Wheeler thought he had the Democratic side of the House very severely when he produced a voucher of 1866, showing that Mr. Floyd as Secretary of war, had paid $200 for a carriage. Mr. Nesmith showed the honorable gentlemen that saw it that Floyd was an improvement on Williams, for his cost $1,600 at one lick?

Baxter, who is undoubtedly the legal governor of Arkansas if there be one, now proposes to take the only rational course that, under the circumstances, it would perhaps be possible for him to pursue, by convening the legislature of the State, and to that representative body of the people submit on his part, the question, Who is governor? The notion that governors can be made by the decisions of judges is of course a gross and revolutionary delusion. The "revolution by injunction" precedent in Louisiana, sustained by Mr. Grant upon the plea of supporting the judiciary, was perhaps the most dangerous precedent ever set in this country. Mr. Grant's serious mistake was pointed out to him by able men of his own party faith; but for reasons best known to himself, he did not think proper to retrace a step which was most palpably unwarranted by any principle or valid theory of constitutional law.

The celebrated author in this admirable essay, clearly demonstrates from a thirty years successful practice, that the alarming consequences of self abuse may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife, pointing out a road of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply privately and radically.

Ladies, it is now unnecessary to go to Fort Wayne in order to get Fine Goods, Millinery Work and Dress Making. Stamets & Wile's new store will supply every thing at city prices.

To Printers.—We have been using a roller composition made at the Sentinel office Fort Wayne, and find it superior to anything we have ever used. We are confident it will give satisfaction.

Mr Hollopeter, brother to our fellow townsman will erect a large steam saw mill and shingle factory at the junction. Work on the buildings will commence next week.

Still Downward.—The spile driving at the tamarack swamp west of town, on the Baltimore road, is still progressing downward. Last week they were down six hundred and thirty feet before getting a good foundation.

Important.—Mr. Long, our enterprising furniture dealer, informs us that he is now fairly embarked in the undertaking business, and will furnish any kind of a coffin, at cost price. He has engaged Mr. Rush, the best finisher in the county to attend to this branch of the trade, and all orders in this line will receive prompt attention.

Town Elections.

The election for town offices takes place next Monday. The Republicans have been in power here some time, and yet everything is not satisfactory. Last year an effort was made to nominate a ticket without regard to politics, but a few leading Republicans went back on the proposition, and made a straight nomination, and in consequence the Democrats put no ticket in the field. A showing of the finances of the town was called for at that time, but none were given and has not since been given. Let a citizen ask any of the town officials to-day how the town stands financially and they cannot tell you. This is because no attention has been given to it. A year or to ago the Marshal never made a report, and never has since nor never will, we fear, to judge from his present location. We have no reason to believe that there has been any dishonesty going on, or that a Credit Mobiler affair has crept into our municipal affairs, but then we don't know anything about it, nor anybody else from what we can gather. This is all wrong. If the Democracy were in power there would be a great cry on this score. The citizens have a right to know how things stand in this respect.

Even during the present year and under the present officers the law has not been complied with. The law distinctly says that an exhibit of receipts and expenditures specifying the sources of such receipts, what appropriations were made, for what objects and the specified amounts of each shall be made immediately after the annual settlement with the corporation, which settlement to be made between the first and last Monday of April of each year to be published in the town papers.

No such exhibit has yet been made, though ample time has been had for that purpose. It is palpably the fact that too much indifference has been bestowed upon these matters. How much is the town in debt? is a question that is often asked but never answered.

We have never attacked the town officers because they were Republicans, for the reason that some might think it was because we were opposed to them politically and would base our opposition on that ground. Had they been Democrats there would have been a showing up much more severe and emphatic than ever has been brought against our opponents. In these small offices which have no political significance, we don't care a tinkers' imprecation for politics where a man is capable and honest, and it ought not to with our citizens generally. We are in favor of a change in the way of managing our corporation offices and suggest the propriety of nominating officers who will make an effort to ascertain how we stand officers who will work for the whole interests of the town, and keep things in such a condition so that we may know at anytime how we stand financially.

Every effort will be made next Monday, by a few of the loyal, to still keep control of the books and the cry of party will be raised in order that a few may hold these offices. We hope that our citizens generally will vote for the interests of our growing town, by electing men who will make an intelligent report of their stewardship. Auburn is not what it was five years ago, and it is no longer a matter of indifference who shall be her official servants.

There is a general complaint about a bridge on the road leading west from M Sheets' house. The water has washed the ground from under a bent, and it is now in a bad condition. A farmer had a horse injured there the other day.

An effort is being made to have the channel of Cedar Creek straightened past the town. An association is being formed. Bro. Baker says they cannot do this without his consent. He proposes that this town shant run everything.

J. G. Flederman, of Fort Wayne, is the boss tailor of the city. He can get up a neat and nobby suit at a very reasonable price, and give the greatest satisfaction.—Persons purchasing at Fort Wayne should give him a call.

Grape Roots.—A large quantity of grape seedings of the Concord variety, from the vine-yard of E. Vordermark & Sons, at Fort Wayne, can now be obtained at their popular shoe store in Auburn, at 10 cents a piece. Every farmer should have them.

Hurrah! for Vordermark & Sons, says everybody who wants Boots & Shoes at the very lowest prices. This firm are selling an immense lot of goods every day which enables them to sell so cheap. We ask our readers to call and examine their prices as it will be money in your pockets Odd Fellows' building, Auburn, Ind.

A magnificent stock of Boots & Shoes have just been received and opened out at the boss dry goods store of Miller & Casebeer. The stock contains every style and variety of boots and shoes, from the smallest to the largest, and they are now offered to the public at prices that defy competition. Examine for yourselves.

Our Cornet Band is making great proficency, and even now, discources good music under the leadership of Prof. Smith who now has them in hand. It will not be long before they can play with the best. The Professor is a thorough and accomplished musician, and is assisting the boys very materially in the art. To us, written music has always been a mystery. It always seemed to us like a lot of little nigger boys climbing over a fence.

Just received, a fine new stock of Boots & Shoes at Miller & Casebeer's. Men and boys boots and shoes, ladies gaiters, and a large variety for children's wear. All new and of every style at the very lowest prices.

Laying Track.—The Baltimore road is laying track eastward and have now reached Cedar Creek east of Sheets'.—Mr. McKechney, one of the contractors on the bridge work informs us that a large force is now employed on the bridging so as to keep out of the way of the track layers. The Sheets bridge was finished yesterday, and the one across the St. Joe, will be ready in time. The spiling across the tamarck swamp will be completed this week. There is considerable grading to do near Hicksville, and it will be sometime before a connection will be made to Defiance. Mr. M. is pushing things with his accustomed energy and will be thro' with his in good season. He is the right man in the right place.

Spenckeville Items.—J. D. Leighty has exchanged his stock of goods and village property to Peter Bishop for his farm, and Peter has entered upon his new business with commendable energy.

Queer, isn't it? Though nature is lavish in her gifts to man, yet he is never satisfied with her adornments. One of our citizens has exemplified this saying by selling off his household property, and going in quest of the striped poll, to get his whiskers blackened.

Mrs. Dove, the lady whose limb was amputated, on Wednesday, died Thursday evening.

One of the most unlucky of our citizens seems to be the Rev. E. V. Erick. Having scarcely recovered from a fall from his horse, when he was seriously though not dangerously kicked by his horse.

Kunsey & Fales, furniture dealers have moved to their new room on Pearl-st.

Handsome Addition.

While Auburn has had several fine additions extending her limits lately, none we think, equals in beauty of location, that of the Rainier addition recently plotted by our enterprising friend Joe, of the Central Grocery. The mapping was done by Mr. Dills, and some forty lots handsomely situated are now in the market.—The soil in the locality is a sandy loam, and never gets disagreeably muddy, while it lies in a excellent position for easy drainage. Taken altogether the locality is unsurpassed, and will make a most desirable point for residences. Several lots have already been sold, on one of which buildings have been erected. Mr. Rainier is offering them at reasonable prices.—Everything considered, our citizens will not have a better chance for investment and those wanting lots should contract at once. It is bound to be one of the beautiful parts of our town.

Love.—Who has not read and admired that most beautiful passage in the holy writ, which says "Love thy neighbor as thyself. One of deeper, more profound sentiment cannot be found in the Bible.—It was the pleasing theme for one of our most eloquent divines in a locality not far from Auburn the other Sabbath, and after an unusually interesting discourse the speaker appealed to his audience for a pledge on the broad principle of this divine injunction. All those that felt as though they could Love their neighbors as themselves were requested to rise.—Now, in said audience were two persons who had realized some difficulty in their business relations and there was some bad feeling between them, though by some strange fatality they sat side by side that day in the same pew. One of them was a pillar of the church and hastened to respond to this beautiful sentiment that should actuate all mankind, and had raised partly up when, horror, his old enemy at his side met his gaze, and down he went like a thousand of brick. Let us hope that the assuaging power of time will heal over these animosities, the sword shall be beat into a plow shear, the spear into a pruning hook and nations and individuals shall learn war no more.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

Sir Lambton Lorraine has declined a public reception at the hands of the New York city authorities, with thanks for the compliment.

A bill has been introduced in the New York State Assembly to incorporate an incremation society, for burning the dead, with a capital of $50,000.

Philadelphia reports a genuine case of cremation. A physician, whose son died, erected a furnace in the cellar of his house and reduced the body to ashes.

A Philadelphia dispatch gives the particulars of a terrible riot in the Honesdale mining district of Pennsylvania. A body of striking miners attacked a party of Swedes who refused to join the Workingmen's League. Pistols, knives, clubs and stones were used with terrible effect. About 25 Swedes were seriously injured, some of them fatally, and several of the rioters were fearfully bruised.

The West.

The fruit crop has not been materially damaged by the recent cold snap in Southern Illinois.... The next Wisconsin State Fair will be held at Oshkosh, Sept. 29.

The National Crop Reporter publishes deductions from the estimates of its correspondents in relation to the probable area which will be seeded this spring in wheat, corn and oats, in the States of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Ohio and Wisconsin. The following is an abstract of the information furnished: The area seeded in spring wheat last year in the States named is placed at 6,960,000 acres, upon which there is an estimated increase this year of 8 per cent., making the estimated area this year 7,502,000 acres. The estimated area planted in corn in 1873 in the above eight States was 20,300,000 acres; the estimated increase this spring is 8 4-10 per cent., which would make the total area nearly 22,000,000 acres. In oats, the area sown last year was 5,272,000 acres in the States named, and the probable increase this year is estimated at 8 2-10 per cent., which makes a total area amounting to 7,514,000 acres.... A Milwaukee paper publishes an interview with the Hon. Alexander Mitchell, President of the Milwaukee and St. Paul railroad, in which he says, in respect to the law passed by the last Legislature of Wisconsin, that the road cannot run under it. He further says that the company will first test the constitutionality of the act in the courts, and, if beaten there, will take off all its trains.

Nearly all the business part of the town of Ishpeming, Mich., has been burned. Loss about $150,000. The fire was the work of incendiaries.

The Chicago Evening Journal has just completed its thirtieth year. In all these years it has never had occasion to defend a libel suit.... Detroit (Mich.) statistics: Number of manufactories in the city, 402—the largest number in single branches being cigars, breweries, iron and furniture; capital employed, $28,540,090; value of annual products, $28,540,000; number of employes, 114,668; annual amount paid in wages, $7,131,780.... A Salt Lake (Utah) dispatch says: "Old man Bender, now in jail here, has been identified through photographs of him sent to Kansas, and will be taken there. The young man arrested as his son has been released, he proving to be a deserter from the army."

The temperance excitement in Oshkosh, Wis., rose to fever heat a few nights ago. The Common Council met to decide the question of license or no license, and at the same time the ladies of the Temperance Union held a meeting to pray for the Common Council. While the ladies were praying, someone cut the gas main, leaving the room in total darkness. The Common Council listened to a speech by Mrs. Henry Lines on the part of the ladies, and a long argument of Ald. Doe against licenses. The question finally passed, by a vote of 11 for licenses and 7 against.... The orders for the abatement of saloons declared nuisances in Des Moines, Ia., have been placed in the Sheriff's hands. The Sheriff is ordered to abate the nuisance by excluding the person from carrying on the business found to be a nuisance, and, if necessary, in order to abate the nuisance, the Sheriff is further ordered to lock up said building and keep it locked.... Track-laying on the Des Moines and Minnesota narrow-gauge railroad is going forward at the rate of one mile per day. The managers expect to have the road completed to Ames, Iowa, by the 4th of July. Six hundred tons of iron are now en route, and arrangements have been made for the purchase of another passenger engine, to cost $10,000.... The Iowa Seed Commissioners have bought, at St. Paul, 2,000 bushels of potatoes and 6,000 bushels of corn for the Northwestern settlers. As the State appropriation is limited to seed, many settlers will need aid in other ways to carry them through the harvest.

The South.

A Raleigh (N. C.) telegram of April 19 says: "A private dispatch received in this city this evening from Western Carolina reports severe and heavy rumblings in Bald and Stone mountains on Thursday last. The trembling of the earth was heard more than 100 miles from the mountains. The shocks are more severe than before, and it is firmly believed by scientists that an eruption is imminent."

Advices from New Orleans state that the whole of that portion of Louisiana extending from Monroe to the mouth of the Red river is under water, and that 10,000 people in that district will soon be on the verge of starvation. Large numbers of negroes from the overflowed district are flocking to New Orleans. Gov. Kellogg has issued a proclamation to officials and citizens of the overflowed districts assuring them that the State Government has done and is doing all that its resources allow to alleviate the sufferings of those who have been reduced to destitution by the disastrous floods.... St. Louis papers state that the robbers who rifled the San Antonio (Texas) stage are James H. Reed, C. H. Carter, and John H. Nelson, all from Vernon county, Mo. A strong posse is in pursuit of them.

A New Orleans dispatch states that the whole Amite valley is under water. The river generally has a bank of twelve to fifteen feet, but now the water is over four feet deep over the banks, and has washed away houses, implements, etc. The inhabitants have fled to the highlands, where they now abide in a destitute condition.... The Columbia Mills, at Richmond, Va., were recently destroyed by fire. Loss, $500,000.

The Mayor of New Orleans, in a dispatch to the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce, states that the number of people in Louisiana already partially or totally ruined by the floods is 25,000, and that the continued high water will increase the number to 50,000.

Washington.

The President, in response to the appeal of Gov. Kellogg for relief for the sufferers from the overflow in the Southern rivers, says that, Congress being in session, he does not feel authorized to order Government aid, as was done in the cases of Chicago and Shreveport. He "will, however, send the dispatch to the Louisiana delegation, and if a resolution is passed by Congress authorizing it, he will exert every authorized means to avert suffering from the disaster which has overtaken the citizens of Louisiana."

M. Bartholdi, the French minister, and Postmaster-General Creswell have agreed upon the basis of a postal treaty between France and the United States, which will establish an international letter rate of nine cents or 50 centimes for each half-ounce in this country, or 10 grammes in France; each country to retain the postage collected therein.

The Civil Service Commission have made a report to the President, in which an appropriation of $25,000 is asked for to defray the necessary expenses of the continuance of the reform.

The bill reported to the Senate from the Committee on Military Affairs to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war provides that there shall be paid to every honorably discharged non-commissioned officer, private soldier, musician, artificer, and wagoner, including those borne on the rolls as slaves, who served the United States in the war of the rebellion, the sum of $8.33⅓ for all his time of service between April 12, 1861, and May 9, 1865, or, in case of a volunteer, up to the time of the muster out of the volunteer organization to which he belonged. In case of the death of any such person, payment is to be made to his widow and children. Any bounties heretofore received from the United States, or any State, are to be deducted from the allowance hereby authorized. No bounties shall be paid to substitutes or to persons discharged as minors. No attorney shall be allowed, on pain of fine and imprisonment, to receive more than $10 for prosecuting any claim under the foregoing provisions.... Reports received by the Department of Agriculture indicate that the quality of the winter-wheat crop is far above the average, and the yield more abundant than for many years past.

The report of the Windom Transportation Committee, recently submitted to the Senate, has been printed. The committee submit that the commerce of the country demands the construction of three trans-continental transportation lines from the Mississippi river to the Atlantic seaboard, which might properly receive Government aid; one via the lakes, one in the central, and the third in the southern, section of the country, and they are of opinion that these should be water routes. On the question of the right of Congress to charter railroad companies whose lines run across States that will not themselves grant the charters, the majority of the committee are of the opinion that Congress has such right. They urge that means should be adopted to improve the navigation of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers.... Land Office Commissioner Drummond has resigned.... Both houses of Congress have passed the bill authorizing the War Department to issue rations to sufferers by the Southwestern floods. No relief will be extended after the 1st of September next.

Political.

The dead-lock in the Massachusetts Legislature has been brought to an end by the election of Gov. William B. Washburn to the vacancy created by Mr. Sumner's death, all of Mr. Hoar's supporters and a majority of Mr. Dawes' casting their votes for him. The thirty-third and final ballot was as follows: Washburn, 149; Curtis, 64; Dawes, 26; Adams, 17; Loring, 4; Phillips, 1; Whittier, 1; Gifford, 1.

The announcement of the election of Gov. Washburn to succeed Sumner caused no little excitement among Massachusetts people in Washington, says a correspondent. Of the eleven Republicans from the Bay State, only four, viz: the Hoar brothers, Gooch and John M. S. Williams, are pleased at the result. The usual charges of fraud and corruption were made, and some denounce Washburn in severe terms for accepting the position.

Foreign.

The war in Cuba will now be fought on both sides with the assistance of its colored population. The Havana Official Gazette announces a decree under which all the slaves furnished by the Government during Jovellar's administration are to be organized as soldiers under white officers, and after five years' service are to be declared free.... The Chilian steamer Tecua is reported lost on the South American Pacific coast, and nineteen persons drowned.

A strike of agricultural laborers is in progress in the eastern counties of England, arising from a demand of the union in Warwickshire for an extra shilling a week. The landlords and farmers intend combining to turn out all the union laborers.... The funeral of Dr. Livingstone, which took place in Westminster Abbey, was attended by a full representation of the Royal Geographical Society.... The French Government has accused certain British subjects of conspiring to assist in the escape of Rochefort from New Caledonia. This the British Government denies. Various diplomatic notes have been exchanged between the two governments.... The Bishop of Nancy has been heavily fined by a German tribunal.

The efforts of Dr. Kenealy, the counsel for the Tichborne claimant, to obtain for him a new trial have failed, as the application has been denied on all its points.... The British House of Commons has voted a grant of £25,000 to Sir Garnet Wolseley, the commander of the Ashantee expedition.... The abandoned steamer Amerique was not sunk, as reported. She was abandoned at sea on the 14th of April by a cowardly crew. On the 15th she was discovered by a passing steamer and towed into the port of Plymouth, England. The Amerique had sustained no apparent damage, and was making no water, except in the engine-room. The cabin was in the greatest confusion, owing to the hurried manner of abandoning the steamer. The greater portion of the baggage of the passengers was aboard.

Advices from St. Thomas state that the authorities of San Domingo have removed the flag of the Samana Bay Company, and resumed possession of the bay and surrounding territory.... A Madrid dispatch reports that the Carlists before Bilboa have been compelled by the heavy fire of the Republican batteries to abandon their positions at Portugalite and San Tuerco.

Dr. Samuel G. Howe, the Resident Commissioner in San Domingo of the Samana Bay Company, asserts that British influence was at the bottom of the troubles that have resulted in the ejectment of the company from the island and the seizure of their property by the Dominican Government.

The British House of Commons has voted a reduction of the income tax one penny in a pound, and the abolition of the house license duty, as recommended in the annual budget. The Indian Budget estimates the extraordinary expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1874-5, on account of the famine, at $32,500,000, and proposes a loan of $42,500,000 to meet any demand.

Mr. Cobleigh was up in the cemetery on Fast Day, looking at the various monuments, and deducting some valuable and instructive lessons from the inscriptions. While reaching up to read one verse on a monument Mr. Cobleigh found it necessary to take advantage of the mound at the foot, and it was only by stretching his neck to the utmost that he could come within reading distance of the words. He had got as far as the sentiment, "Gone to a happier shore—" when his feet suddenly slipped backward and he came down with great violence, scraping his nose the whole length of the column, and rapping his head sharply against the granite base. The sound of the concussion attracted the attention of several people, who at once rushed to his assistance firmly believing he was dead; but before they could get to him he was on his feet, and vigorously kicking the monument.—Danbury News.

VETO.

Message of President Grant Vetoing the Senate Finance Bill.

To the Senate of the United States:

Herewith I return Senate bill No. 617, entitled "An act to fix the amount of United States notes and the circulation of national banks, and for other purposes," without approval. In doing so, I must express my regret at not being able to give my assent to a majority of legislators chosen by the people to make laws for their guidance, and I have studiously sought to find sufficient arguments to justify such assent, but unsuccessfully. Practically, it is a question whether the measure under discussion would give an additional dollar to the irredeemable paper currency of the country or not, and whether, by requiring three-fourths of the reserves to be retained by banks and prohibiting interest to be received on the balance, it might not prove a contraction. But the fact cannot be concealed that, theoretically, the bill increases the paper circulation $100,000,000, less only the amount of reserves restrained from circulation by the provisions of the second section. The measure has been supported on the theory that it would give increased circulation. It is a fair inference, therefore, that, if in practice the measure should fail to create the abundance of circulation expected of it, the friends of the measure, particularly those out of Congress, would clamor for such inflation as would give the expected relief. This theory, in my belief, is a departure from the true principles of finance, national interest, national obligations to creditors, Congressional promises, party pledges on the part of both the political parties, and of the personal views and promises made by me in every annual message sent to Congress, and in my inaugural address.

In my annual message to Congress in December, 1869, the following passages appear: "Among the evils growing out of the rebellion, and not yet referred to, is that of an irredeemable currency. It is an evil which I hope will receive your most earnest attention. It is a duty, and one of the highest duties, of the Government, to secure to the citizen a medium of exchange of fixed, unvarying value. This implies a return to a specie basis, and no substitute for it can be devised. It should be commenced now, and reached at the earliest practicable moment consistent with a fair regard to the interests of the debtor class. Immediate resumption, if practicable, would not be desirable. It would compel the debtor class to pay, beyond their contracts, the premium on gold at the date of their purchases, and would bring bankruptcy and ruin to thousands. Fluctuation, however, in the paper value of the measure of all values, gold, is detrimental to the interest of trade. It makes the man of business an involuntary gambler, for, in all sales where future payment is to be made, both parties speculate as to what will be the value of the currency to be paid and received. I earnestly recommend to you, then, such legislation as will insure a gradual return to specie payment, and put an immediate stop to the fluctuations of the value of currency."

I still adhere to the view then expressed. As early as Dec. 4, 1865, the House of Representatives passed a resolution by a vote of 144 yeas to 6 nays, concurring in the views of the Secretary of the Treasury, in relation to the necessity of a contraction of the currency with a view to as early a resumption of specie payments as the business interests of the country will permit, and pledging co-operative action to this end, as speedily as possible. The first act passed by the Forty-first Congress, on the 18th day of March, 1869, was as follows:

"An Act to Strengthen the Public Credit of the United States.

"Be it enacted, etc., That, in order to remove any doubt as to the purpose of the Government to discharge all its obligations to the public creditor, and to settle conflicting questions and interpretations of the law in virtue of which such obligations have been contracted, it is hereby provided and declared that the faith of the United States is solemnly pledged to the payment in coin, or its equivalent, of all the obligations of the United States, and of all the interest-bearing obligations, except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of any such obligations has expressly provided that the same be paid in lawful moneys or other currency than gold and silver; but none of said interest-bearing obligations not already due shall be redeemed or paid before maturity, unless at such time notes of the United States shall be convertible into coin at the option of the holder, or unless at such time bonds of the United States bearing a lower rate of interest than the bonds to be redeemed can be sold at par in coin; and the United States also solemnly pledges its faith to make provision at the earliest practicable period for the redemption of United States notes in coin."

This act still remains as a continuing pledge of the United States to make provision at the earliest practicable moment for the redemption of the United States notes in coin. A declaration contained in the act of June 20, 1864, created an obligation that the total amount of United States notes issued, or to be issued, should never exceed $400,000,000. The amount in actual circulation was actually reduced to $356,000,000, at which point Congress passed the act of Feb. 4, 1868, suspending the further reduction of the currency.

The $44,000,000 have ever been regarded a reserve to be used only in case of an emergency, such as has occurred on several occasions, and must occur when, from any cause, the revenues suddenly fall below the expenditures; and such a reserve is necessary because the fractional currency, amounting to $50,000,000, is redeemable in legal-tenders on call. It may be said that such a return of fractional currency for redemption is improbable, but let steps be taken for a return to a specie basis, and it will be found that silver will take the place of fractional currency as rapidly as it can be supplied. When the premium on gold reaches a sufficiently low point, with the amount of United States notes to be issued permanently within proper limits, and the Treasury so strengthened as to be able to redeem them in coin on demand, it will be then safe to inaugurate a system of free banking, with such provisions as to make the compulsory redemption of circulating notes of banks in coin or United States notes, themselves redeemable and made equivalent to coin. As a measure preparatory to free banking, or for placing the Government in a position to redeem its notes in coin at the earliest practicable moment, the revenues of the country should be increased so as to pay the current expenses, provide for the sinking fund required by law, and also a surplus to be retained in the Treasury in gold. I am not a believer in any artificial method of making paper money equal to coin, when coin is not owned or held ready to redeem the promises to pay; for paper money is nothing more than promises to pay, and is valuable exactly in proportion to the amount of coin that it can be converted into. While coin is not used as a circulating medium, or the currency of the country is not convertible into it at par, it becomes an article of commerce as much as any other product. The surplus will seek a foreign market as will any other surplus. The balance of trade has nothing to do with the question. The duties on imports, being required in coin, create a limited demand for gold, and about enough to satisfy that demand remains in the country. To increase this supply, I see no way open but by the Government hoarding through the means above given, and possibly by requiring the national banks to aid. It is claimed by the advocates of the measure herewith returned that there is an unequal distribution of the banking capital of the country. I was disposed to give great weight to this view of the question at first, but, on reflection, it will be remembered that there still remains $4,000,000 of authorized bank note circulation assigned to States having less than their quota not yet taken. In addition to this, the States having less than their quota of bank circulation have the option of $25,000,000 more to be taken from those States having more than their proportion. When this is all taken up, or when specie payments are fully restored, or are in rapid process of restoration, will be the time to consider the question of "more currency."

EXECUTIVE MANSION, April 22, 1874.

Nearly every pound of butter used in Florida is shipped from Ohio.

The Arkansas Rebellion.

Little Rock, Ark., April 17.—Gov. Baxter has contracted his lines to the vicinity of the Anthony House, and is now proceeding, as before, to exercise the duties of Governor, making the Anthony House the Capitol for the time being.

This morning both the private secretaries of Brooks and Baxter applied at the Postoffice for mail matter addressed to the Governor of Arkansas. The Postmaster declined to deliver to either party, and telegraphed to Washington for instructions.

Baxter has issued another proclamation in which he reviews the history of the contest between Brooks and himself, and closes with an appeal to the people to rally to his support.

In the Circuit Court, to-day, Judge Whytock overruled the motion to set aside the judgment in the Brooks-Baxter case, and sustain the motion to correct the record, so as to show that the demurrer was submitted without the knowledge of Baxter or his attorneys.

The Bar held a meeting to-day, and passed severe resolutions against Whipple, Brooks' attorney, for his non-professional conduct, and also against the Court for its action in the absence of the Governor's counsel.

Gen. Thomas P. Dockery has been appointed by Baxter Military Governor of the city, and he has ordered all male citizens between 18 and 45 to report for duty immediately.

An address signed by nearly all the leading citizens of Little Rock, was issued to-day, urging the people of the State to rally at once to the Capital, and aid in maintaining the authority of Baxter.

The United States troops are keeping a sharp eye on the belligerents, and will promptly interpose to prevent bloodshed.

Washington, April 17.—Postmaster-General Creswell, in response to a telegram of the Postmaster at Little Rock, received to-day, instructed him as follows: "Letters addressed to Gov. Baxter, or Baxter, Governor of Arkansas, should be delivered to Baxter. Letters addressed to Gov. Brooks, or to Brooks, Governor of Arkansas, should be delivered to Brooks. You will retain all communications addressed to the Governor of Arkansas until further orders."

Little Rock, April 19.—The condition of affairs is materially unchanged. Brooks and Baxter have each issued another proclamation calling upon the people to rally to their support. Several hundred militia from the surrounding country have arrived at the call of Baxter, and the streets are full of armed men, who are eager to attack the Brooks stronghold, but are restrained by the presence of the United States troops.

Little Rock, April 20.—There is no change in the situation. A company of United States soldiers occupies the telegraph office and Gazette buildings. A few additional companies have been added to Gov. Baxter's force, and one to Brooks'. The men on both sides are resting on their arms.

Little Rock, April 21.—The Baxter-Brooks imbroglio has culminated in a little blood-letting, and the wildest excitement reigns in the city. About 5 o'clock this evening the colored troops, under command of Col. King (white), paraded the streets, preceded by a brass band. After marching around several streets they were halted in front of the Metropolitan Hotel, and the band played a lively air. The troops fronted the hotel and yelled for Gov. Baxter. He appeared on the balcony and made them a speech, amid the wildest cheers. Just then Col. Rose, the post commandant, rode up to Col. White, and said something to him about making a hostile demonstration, when some one in one of the upper buildings fired a shot into the Baxter crowd, which was followed by others from the direction of the crowd standing in the street near the Metropolitan Hotel. This action caused the Baxter men to return the fire. The colored troops rapidly retreated from the streets, and firing was very lively for a few minutes, the Baxter men running up the street and the others giving way. Amid this confusion Col. Rose rode rapidly to the City Hall, called out his company, barricaded the street temporarily with a hook and ladder truck, and formed his men behind it across the street in solid column to prevent an advance by the Baxter men. About 200 shots were fired. The street was cleared of men in a short time. Several Baxter men were wounded. Major D. F. Shall, who was at the Anthony House, received a wound in the head, from which he is not expected to recover. Gen. W. A. Crawford received a painful wound in the head, though it is not fatal. One or two others were slightly hurt.

Little Rock, Ark., April 22.—Baxter has abandoned all hope of turning Brooks out of the Executive office by force of arms, and has decided to summon an extra session of the Legislature. He has informed the President by telegraph of his decision, and asked protection for those members of the Legislature who come to the capital. The President is asked to accept the verdict of the Legislature as final, and to enforce it, if necessary, by the use of United States soldiers. President Grant replied as follows:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, April 22, 1874.

The Hon. Elisha Baxter, Little Rock, Ark.:

I heartily approve any adjustment, peaceably, of the pending difficulties in Arkansas, by means of the Legislative Assembly, the courts or otherwise. I will give all the assistance and protection I can under the Constitution and laws of the United States to such mode of adjustment. I hope the military on both sides will be disbanded.

(Signed) U. S. GRANT.

Many of Baxter's forces are disbanding, and transportation is freely given them to their homes.

Little Rock, April 23.—There is no material change in the situation. Baxter has issued his proclamation calling the Legislature together in extra session, which was signed by Johnson, the Secretary of State. For this offense Brooks took possession of the office and ordered Johnson out, but he refused to go, and applied to the United States troops for aid in reinstating him. No decision has as yet been reached on the request. It is now probable that active hostilities will be postponed until the meeting of the Legislature, which body will undoubtedly decide in favor of Baxter's claims.

Civil Service Reform.

President Grant has sent the following message to Congress:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Herewith I transmit the report of the Civil Service Commission, authorized by act of Congress of March 3, 1871, and invite your special attention thereto. If sustained by Congress, I have no doubt the rules can, after the experience gained, be so improved and enforced as to still more materially benefit the public service, and relieve the Executive, members of Congress, and heads of departments from influences prejudicial to good administration. The rules, as they have heretofore been enforced, have resulted beneficially, as is shown by the opinion of members of the Cabinet and their subordinates in the departments, and in that opinion I concur. But the rules applicable to officers who are to be appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, are, in a great measure, impracticable, except in so far as they may be sustained by the action of that body. These must necessarily remain so, unless the direct sanction of the Senate is given to the rules. I advise for the present only such appropriations as may be adequate to continue the work in its present form, and would leave to the future to determine whether the direct sanction of Congress shall be given to the rules that may perhaps be devised for regulating the method of the selection of appointees, or a portion of them, who need to be confirmed by the Senate. The same amount appropriated last year would be adequate for the coming year, but I think the public interest would be promoted by authority in the Executive for allowing a small compensation for special service performed beyond the usual office hours, under the act of 1871, to persons called into the service of the Government.

"The Heart of a Man."

When Napoleon the Great died at St. Helena, an English physician took charge of his heart, depositing it in a silver basin filled with water. Two tapers burned near it but the custodian felt nervously anxious while waching it through the night, and did not sleep. In the silence of midnight he heard a rustling sound then a plunge into the water, and a rebound on the floor, all occurring with the quickness of thought. He sprang from his bed to see an enormous rat dragging the precious relic to his hole! A moment more and the heart which had been too vast in its ambition to be satisfied with the sovereignty of continental Europe would have been more degraded than the dust of Imperial Cæsar.

Interest.—No blister draws sharper than interest. It works all day and all night, in fair weather and in foul. It has no sound in its footsteps, but travels fast. It gnaws at a man's substance, with invisible teeth. It binds industry with a film as a fly is bound in a spider's web. Debts roll a man over and over, binding him hand and foot, and letting him hang upon the fatal mesh until the long-legged interest devours him. There is but one thing on a farm or plantation like it, and that is the Canada thistle, which swarms new plants every time you break its roots; whose blossoms are prolific, and every flower the father of a million seeds; every leaf is an awl, every branch is a spear, and every plant like a platoon of bayonets, and a field of them like an armed host; the whole plant a torment and a vegetable curse, and yet the farmer had better make his bed of Canada thistles than attempt to be at ease upon interest.

A Hair-owing Tale.

The much-abused Rev. Florence McCarthy, of Chicago, in a recent lecture on "Who Wouldn't be a Minister?" said: "One of the first troubles which befall a minister—and it was a matter which they would never suppose he would have any trouble about—was the management of his hair. Happy is the minister whose head is shapely and whose hair naturally falls into elegant and handsome convolutions. He can get as many calls and as much salary as he needs. If the hair is right it matters little whether his principles be good or doctrine sound. I speak feelingly on this subject," said the lecturer. "My own hair has been the cause, I fear, of much of my misfortune. I never thought of it until recently; but now I remember that the people who ousted me from Union Park Church are exactly those who used to labor with me about my hair. After watching public sentiment in my church on this subject for about one year, I can assure you there were three parties in it on the subject of my hair. The first insisted on its being brushed down close. The second on its being stuck up on end. The third—the conservative party—on having it loosed up. Noticing that these three parties corresponded to the three divisions of a sermon, I soon fell into the habit of delivering the first head of my discourse with my hair as now. [Flattened to the head.] The second division as now. [Putting his front locks on end.] The third division of the sermon I generally delivered with my hair brought down to the conservative position [putting his hands through his hair and smoothing down the more elevated locks], and even now I don't know that my hair has given entire satisfaction."

Irish Ladies.

Physically, Irish women (says a writer) are probably the finest race in the world—I mean taller, better limbed and chested, larger eyed and with more luxuriant hair and free action, than any nation I have observed. The Phœnician and Spanish blood which has run hundred of years in their veins still kindles its dark fire in their eyes, and, with the vivacity of the northern mind and the bright color of the northern skin, these southern qualities mingle in most admirable and superb harmony. The idea we form of Italian and Grecian beauty is never realized in Greece and Italy; but we find it in Ireland, heightened and exceeded. Cheeks and lips of the delicacy and bright tint of carnation, with snowy teeth and eyebrows of jet, are what we should look for on the palette of Appelles, could we recall the painter and reanimate his far-famed models; and these varied charms, united, fall very commonly to the share of the fair Milesian. Modest to a proverb, the Irish woman is as unsuspecting of propriety as if it were an impossible thing; and she is as fearless and joyous as a midshipman, and sometimes as noisy. In a ball room she looks ill-dressed, not because her dress was ill put on, but because she dances, not glides, sits down without care, pulls her flowers to pieces, and if her head-dress incommodes her, she will give it a pull or a push. If she is offended, she asks for an explanation. If she does not understand you, she confesses her ignorance. If she wishes to see you next day, she tells you how and when. She is a child of nature, and children are not "stylish."

Indigestion.—A deal of indigestion comes from brainfag. The brain is a secreter of nervous power, and vitalizes the whole body. In the sensitive stomach, fruits and vegetables together do not agree, vegetables being antagonistic. Dyspeptics perhaps, without exception, do now and then gormandize. Lightly pound your stomach three times a day. Our meals should be holiday hours—reunions.

Fat is a lower formation than muscle. First brain, second muscle, third fat. Never be so fat that you cannot run up a flight of stairs or hasten a block or two without being out of breath. Nations living largely on potatoes deteriorate in brain.

There are two kinds of dyspepsia, mucous and nervous. Fat persons have mucous dyspepsia, and lean persons nervous dyspepsia. From the ranks of our mucous dyspeptics we get our apoplectics and our paralytics; and from our nervous dyspeptics we have our lunatics. If you eat to much vinegar, an artificial acid, you will not have white teeth; it acts on the enamel. The natural acids are from the fruits—apples, lemons, currants, etc.

A Race of Men Who Have Not Yet Learned to Talk.—On the island of Borneo has been found a certain race of wild creatures, of which kindred varieties have been discovered in the Philippine Islands, Terra del Fuego, and in South America. They walk, usually, almost erect, on two legs, and in that attitude measure about four feet in height. They construct no habitations, form no families, scarcely associate together, sleep in caves, feed on snakes and vermin, on ants' eggs, and on each other. They cannot be tamed or forced to any labor, and are hunted and shot among the trees like the great gorilla, of which they are a stunted copy. When captured alive one finds with surprise that their uncouth jabbering sounds are like articulate language. They turn up a human face to gaze at their captors, and females show instincts of modesty. In fine, these wretched beings are men and women.—Siam Weekly Advertiser.

The Late President Fillmore.—It seems, according to Burleigh, of the Boston Journal, that nobody was more surprised than the late President Fillmore at his nomination to the second official position in our country. Burleigh says: "In the old Whiggstines Mr. Fillmore was the favorite son of New York. I was standing by his side in the Delevan House, Albany, when he received news of his nomination for the office of Vice-President. He thought it was a joke. But when satisfied of the fact, he turned white as a sheet and said, 'You could knock me down with a straw.' The whole thing was so unexpected that he sat down like a man fainting."

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

A PURE white vinegar can be made, it is said, from the juice of watermelons.

LAMBS FOR THE BUTCHER.—For fine lambs, procure good Merino ewes and cross with a Southdown or Cotswold ram.

TO STOP THE FLOW OF BLOOD.—There is no better use to make of fine-cut tobacco, than to bind it upon a fresh wound, and nothing will stop the flow of blood quicker.

STUMP MACHINE.—The simplest contrivance is to chain a strong piece of timber to one side of the stump by very strong chains hooked into the roots, and attach oxen to the other end; going about in a circle will twist the stump out.

FILTER FOR CISTERN WATER.—Perforate the bottom of a wooden box with a number of small holes; place inside a piece of flannel, cover with coarsely powdered charcoal, over this coarse river sand, and on this small pieces of sandstone.

ANTS IN GREENHOUSES.—Lumps of soft putty are excellent traps for ants. Lay them around where the ants most frequent, and as soon as the lumps are stuck full of them, work the putty over, ants and all, and re-set the same lump as a trap again.

FEEDING CALVES IN TRANSIT.—The best way is to take a large basket of eggs along, and when the calf begins to make too much noise, break one and thrust it down his throat, shell and all. This will satisfy them for some time, when it may be repeated. Fed in this way they will ride quietly, and will not shrink half so much.

TO PREVENT MOTHS' RAVAGES.—Hemp when the blossoms are just opened, is an infallible preservative of textile fabrics and furs, against the attacks of moths. The stalk, with leaves and flowers, is cut when blooming (about July), and dried in the shade. It is said to preserve its properties for several years.

GOOD FODDER FOR SHEEP.—Sheep prefer bright wheat straw as an article of occasional diet. Bean straw, if cut before the beans are ripe, would be as good as most green fodder, at least it is so considered in Scotland; but if left, as is usually the case, until the beans are ripe the straw is about as valuable as very coarse wheat straw. Sheep would probably eat bean fodder if starved to death and no fears need be entertained as to the ill effect of such food except the want of nourishment.

HOW TO SWEEP.—The right way to sweep is to incline the handle a little forward, then give a light drawing stroke, allowing the broow to scarcely touch the carpet. Not one half the weight of the broom should be allowed to press on the carpet, as the dirt is moved forward. Let the dirt be moved and rolled lightly. If a generous quantity of tea grounds, small bits of wet paper or clean and wet sawdust can be spread over the carpet before the sweeping is commenced, all the fine dirt will adhere to the wet materials.

BARREL MEASURE.—A barrel of apples, pears and potatoes should by law represent a quantity equal to one hundred quarts of grain or dry measure. An ordinary flour barrel holds about a half-bushel or nearly one-eighth more than the standard barrel. Farmers not using the legal barrel are losers to the amount of many thousands of dollars each year. Eight hundred barrels of potatoes, in the large or common flour barrel, lose four hundred bushels or $250! The consumer is not benefited by this error of the farmer, for he buys of the merchant by the peck, or else by the barrel, which means the hundred quart barrel.

CHANGE OF SEED.—The American Agriculturist answers a correspondent by saying: "With all other grains than corn, a change of seed now and then is considered advisable. Potatoes are especially improved by a change procured from a different locality and soil. But corn has not generally been found to deteriorate by long planting; on the other hand, there are many farmers who are planting seed produced from the corn their fathers planted a generation ago. Running out of the corn is more likely to be the result of impoverished soil, and the best method of improvement would probably be a crop of clover upon the land, to be plowed under, or some other substantial fertilizer."

A FARMER'S EXPERIENCE.—That the success of farming is in experience.

That to ask a man's advice is not stooping, but often of much benefit.

That to keep a place for everything, and everything in its place, saves many a step, and is pretty sure to lead to good tools, and to keeping them in good order.

That kindness to stock is like good shelter, and is a saving of fodder.

That to fight weeds is to favor grain, and to do justice to your neighbors.

That in making home agreeable, you keep your boys out of the city.

That it is a good thing to keep an eye out on experiments, and note all, both good and bad.

That it is a good thing to grow into farming—not jump into it.—Galena Gazette.

BREAKING UP A SITTING HEN.—A friend of ours told us, the other day, how his wife cures hens of sitting; and as it is a very novel way, we will repeat it for the benefit of others who are bothered with inveterate old sitters. This lady had a hen that was bound to sit; the lady was bound sheshould not. She would shut up the old hen one day, and when released back she would go to her sitting. Patience finally gave out. Picking up some splinters from the chip yard (some four or five inches long) she bound them firmly to the hen's legs, leaving only the hip joints in working order. Biddie was outwitted; like the old Dutchman's hen, she would have to sit standing up.—Cor. Rural New Yorker.

RAISING TURKEYS.—No turkeys should be kept as breeders unless they are really prime. They should be carefully selected from good and thrifty flocks; it is better to select the gobbler from one flock and the hens from another. The large breeds are the best, the young turkeys being stronger and easier to rear. Keep them in a thrifty and growing condition without allowing them to get too fat, and feed them on a variety of food such as oats, bran, potatoes, crusts of bread, etc. Before and at the time of laying, they should have access to some shell and bone-forming substances, such as burnt bones broken fine, old plastering, egg shells, or something of the kind, and should be fed better. If they incline to lay too long before setting, stop feeding; if we want to keep them laying we keep feeding.

CASTOR OIL AS A LEATHER PRESERVATIVE.—A correspondent of the Germantown Telegraph, who says he has tested all the patent preparations and popular recipes for preserving leather, prefers castor oil to all of them. He adds: "We have had boots a year old that we have oiled with it, and the leather was soft, smooth and water-proof to the last time they were used. We apply it clear, without heat. A little lampblack might be used on old leather, but is seldom necessary on new, as the oil itself seems to keep the blacking on, and renders the leather black and of fine appearance. Those who have been annoyed with hard, cracked, water-soaked boots, the surface of the latter rough, without blacking, and the leather shrunken and wrinkled, so as to chafe, gall, and otherwise punish the feet, will find castor oil, well applied, to be satisfactory. We have used it for wagons and buggies, and find it is every way superior. It will wear longer, lubricate better, and is less objectionable than anything we know of."

Danberries.

A DANBURY widower is so afraid of his wife's ghost appearing unto him that he sleeps with a pistol under his pillow.

MR. JARED HENNESSY started for Colorado, yesterday, for his wife's health. It is to be regretted that she could not accompany him.

THERE is a time for all things. The time for a boy to run away from school and go fishing, is when his folks have company to tea.

FENCES along the Hudson River road bear the inscription: "No. 18 cures pain." A great many people would save pain by wearing No. 18s.

A DANBURY man whose wife recently died, subsequently confessed to a friend that "Nobody could pull down an undercoat as neatly as Jane did."

How few sitting in comfortable clothing in the genial heat of home fires give a thought to the poor gardener out in the bitter blast sowing onions.

ANOTHER harbinger of spring is the man with his coat pocket full of walnuts, which he cracks on the curb stones and against awning posts when you are speaking, and eats when he is talking.

SPRING having sufficiently advanced to thaw out the cobble stones, robbins and the windows in vacant buildings are receiving the atttention of the youth of the land. The only sure way to hit a bird with a stone is to first spit on the stone and then aim three times.

Big Trees—The Yosemite Eclipsed.

The Brisbane (Australia) Courier publishes the following official telegram from Mr. Walker Hill, the Government botanist, dated from Cardwell, and received by the Queensland Secretary for Lands: "Since the 20th of November we have examined the banks of the Mulgrave, Russell, Mossman, Daintree and Hull rivers and have been more or less successful in finding suitable land for sugar and other tropical and semi-tropical productions. The ascent of the summit of Bellenden Kerr was successfully made by Johnstone, Hill and eight troopers. At 2,500 feet in height we observed an undescribed tree with crimson flowers, which excels the Poinciana regia, Colvillia racemosa, Lagerstroma regia, and the Jacaranda mimosifolia; at 4,400 feet a tree fern, which will excel in grandeur all others of the Alboreous class; a palm tree at the same height which will rival any of the British-India species in gracefulness. On the banks of the Daintree we saw a palm tree cocoa, which far exceeds the unique specimen in the garden of the same genera from Brazil in grandeur and gracefulness. While cutting a given line on the banks of the River Johnstone, for the purpose of examining the land, an enormous fig tree stood in the way, far exceeding in stoutness and grandeur the renowned forest giants of California and Victoria. Three feet from the ground it measured 150 feet in circumference; at 55 feet, where it sent forth giant branches, the stem was nearly 80 feet in circumference.

PNEUMATIC DISPATCH.—The pneumatic tube in London extends from Euston Square to the Postoffice, a distance of 4,738 yards. The machinery for operating the line is at Holborn, which is about one-third of the distance from the Postoffice to Euston. The tube is five feet high and four feet six inches wide. The wagons are ten feet long, and constructed to fit the tube closely by means of an india-rubber flange, and so form a sort of piston, upon which the air may act to the greatest advantage. The machinery consists of an engine having two twenty-four-inch cylinders, with twenty inches stroke. The fan is twenty-two feet six inches in diameter, and makes two revolutions for each stroke of the engine. The trains are drawn from the extremities of the line by exhaustion, and propelled thereto by compression.—Scribner's.

AGES OF SENATORS.—Mr. Sumner was forty years old when he was chosen to the Senate; Mr. Wilson was forty-three, and Daniel Webster was forty-five—the latter at that period having already served ten years in the national House of Representatives. The next preceding Massachusetts Senator of considerable tenure was John Davis, who was forty-eight years of age at the time of his election. Mr. Dawes is a little less than fifty-eight, Judge Hoar and Gen. Banks are each a little over fifty-eight, and Mr. Adams is sixty-seven.

LORD LOVELL, THE PLOWMAKER.

BY MRS. S. M. SMITH.

Lord Lovell, he sat with his trusty ring,
  In the midst of the ring sat he,
As fine a case of a corporate king
  As ever you'd wish to see, see, see,
  As ever you'd wish to see.

Lord Lovell the middleman vowed to defend,
  And the papers they printed his vow;
He swore that John Hayseed might die in the furrow
  Before he would sell him a plow, plow, plow,
  Before he would sell him a plow.

He swore by white, and he swore by black,
  He swore by the heaven's blue,
That he never would fly from the Hayseed pack
  While a middleman proved true, true, true,
  While a middleman proved true.

He had fifty thousand middlemen,
  Fifty thousand men had he;
And they all swore with him that they'd never surrender
  To any hayseed army-my-my,
  To any hayseed army.

"'Tis not for myself," Lord Lovell cries,
  "But I'll fight to the death for you,
For, if John Hayseed stops the supplies,
  Why, what in the world will you do, do, do?
  Why, what in the world will you do?

"You've got to have carriages, horses, cigars,
  You've got to have houses and things;
And he shall continue to foot the bills,
  Or what is the use of our rings, rings, rings?
  Or what is the use of our rings?"

"Now tarry, Lord Lovell," John Hayseed said,
  And listen to reason, do;
You know I've no use for your middlemen—
  It's enough to pay tribute to you, you, you,
  It's enough to pay tribute to you."

"You shall pay it to both," Lord Lovell cried,
  "While I of the ring am king."
"I rather think not," John Hayseed replied,
  "And I guess I must smash that ring, ring, ring,
"I guess I must smash that ring."

Then, to arms! The drums of the granges beat,
  And the drums of the Farmers' Club;
And Lord Lovell instanter began to retreat,
  At the sound of the first rub-a-dub—dub—dub,
  At the sound of the first rub-a-dub.

But the fifty thousand middlemen,
  Not one could the battle shirk,
It was more than conquer or die with them—
  It was victory or work, work, work.

Oh! a wonderful thing it was to see,
  A wonderful thing to be done;
John Hayseed the whole fifty thousand took,
  Without even firing a gun, gun, gun,
  Without even firing a gun.

For at the first sight of his new Grange plow,
  Every middleman laid down his arms;
And now he has taken them into the Grange,
  And they handle the plow on their farms, farms, farms,
  They handle the plow on their farms.

Lord Lovell kept running all day and all night,
  Lord Lovell a-running kept he;
For he vowed that he couldn't abide the sight
  Of such a rough-looking army-my-my,
  Of such a rough-looking army.

He was sick of the din John Hayseed made—
  He was tired of the whole hubbub;
And he ran, till dead on the turf he was laid
  By a cruel Farmers' Club, Club, Club,
  By a cruel Farmers' Club.

Now out of his grave the grass grows tall—
  The grass grows tall in the spring—
'Tis sprinkled with hayseed every fall,
  And that is the end of the ring, ring, ring,
  And that is the end of the ring.

ILLINOIS STATE GRANGE.

Delegate Convention at Bloomington—Adoption of Several Amendments to the Constitution of the National Grange.

The Illinois State Grange met at Bloomington Tuesday, April 14. The Master, Alonzo Golden, stated the object of the meeting, as follows: There were now nearly 1,400 granges in Illinois, and as 1,600 might be expected at the December annual meeting, it became necessary to reduce the representatives to counties. Some change, therefore, seemed necessary in the Constitution of the National Grange. The object of a special meeting at this time was to adopt or reject the proposed amendments to the Constitution of the National Grange. Many of them proposed radical changes in the order. When adopted by two-thirds of the State Granges they would be the law under which all subsequent National and State Granges would assemble.

Burdett, Van Court and Clarke were appointed a Committee on Credentials, and reported seventy counties entitled to representation.

The sections calling for a reduction of representatives, and the establishment of County or District Granges, were adopted.

The provisions to make O. H. Kelley and others life-members of the order was rejected, and all the other amendments were adopted, as follows:

STATE GRANGE.

SECTION 1. Fifth degree. Pomona—(Faith). Composed of Masters of subordinate granges and their wives who are Matrons, provided that when the number of subordinate granges in any State becomes so great as to render it necessary, the State Grange may, in such manner as it may determine, reduce its representatives, by proving for the election of a certain proportion of those entitled to membership in the State Grange from each county; and the members so chosen shall constitute the State Grange.

SEC. 2. There may be established District or County Granges in the fifth degree, not to exceed one in each county, composed of Masters and Past-Masters of Subordinate Granges, and their wives, who are Matrons, and such fourth-degree members (not to exceed three) as may be elected thereto by the Subordinate Granges, under such regulations as may be established by State Granges. Such District or County Granges shall have charge of the educational and business interests of the Order in their respective districts; and shall encourage, strengthen and aid the Subordinate Granges represented therein. Dispensations for such District or County Granges shall issue from the State Grange, and under such regulations as the State Grange may adopt.

NATIONAL GRANGE.

Sixth Degree. Flora—(Hope.) Composed of—

The Past-Masters of the National Grange, and their wives, who have taken the degree of Flora.

The officers and members of the Executive Committee of the National Grange.

Masters of the State Granges, and their wives, who have taken the fifth degree.

One additional representative from each State for each 50,000 members, or fractional part thereof, in excess of 30,000, and representatives to be alternately a brother and sister for every alternate 50,000, must be fifth-degree members, and will be entitled to the sixth degree.

Section 2 (as amended) is the same as before, except that it provides that the officers shall be chosen in December, and installed in the January following. Vacancies by death or resignation to be filled at a special election at the next regular meeting thereof—officers so chosen to serve until the annual meeting.

Section 4 changes the number on the Executive Committee of the National Grange from three to five members.

ARTICLE II—MEETINGS.

SECTIONS 1. Subordinate Granges shall meet at least once each month, and may hold intermediate meetings.

Section 3 merely changes the time of meeting of the National Grange from the first Wednesday in February to the third Wednesday in November.

ARTICLE XIII.

The Master of the National Grange and the members of the Executive Committee shall be empowered to suspend from office any officer of the National Grange who may prove inefficient or derelict in the discharge of his duty, subject to appeal to the next session thereafter of the National Grange.

A business meeting was held in the evening, to provide for the purchase of agricultural machinery.

SECOND DAY.

The committee on mileage reported through Mr. Forsythe, and the report was adopted.

Mr. Shattenkirk, from the Committee on Resolutions, then made a report.

Section 1, making founders of the order members of the National Grange was rejected.

Section 2, admitting past members of the National Grange, and their wives, who have taken the degree of Flora, was rejected.

Section 3, admitting officers and members of the Executive Committee of the National Grange, was rejected.

Section 4, admitting Masters of State Granges and their wives who have taken the fifth degree, was ratified.

Section 5, admitting to the National Grange one additional representative for each State, for each 50,000 membes, or fraction in excess of 30,000—said representatives to be alternately brother and sister, who must be of the fifth degree, and will be entitled to the sixth, was ratified.

All the other amendments proposed were ratified, except that making the minimum fee for membership of subordinate granges for men five dollars, and for women two dollars, for four degrees. This was rejected.

Mr. Van Court, from the Committee on exhibitions, reported regarding the display shown by a number of manufactures and wholesale dealers.

On motion of Mr. Forsythe, it was resolved that a sufficient number of copies of the official report of proceedings be published to supply a copy to each subordinate grange; and the secretary was instructed to distribute them.

D. W. Dame then proceeded to instruct in the secret work of the order; after which, and some remarks by various members, the grange adjourned until 2 p. m.

No busine sswas transacted during the afternoon session, which was almost entirely taken up in a report by Purchasing Agent Frew, of the business of his office, and statistics of the State Grange as a business organization.

At 5 o'clock the grange adjourned sine die.

Granges and Grangers.

THERE are 1,400 granges in Illinois.

MISSOURI has 1,870 granges thoroughly organized.

THE work of organizing granges in Maine is going on briskly.

THE granges of Michigan now number about 320—having increased nearly fifty in two weeks.

THE Patrons in the vicinity of Grand Rapids, Michigan, propose to purchase and run the works of the manufacturing company at that city.

IF all the farmers in the Union could free themselves from debt by the last day of the present year, 1875 would be to them a year of jubilee.

OVER a million of Patrons in the Union and their numbers daily increasing! Never before did any movement, social, political or religious, make such rapid progress. Patrons may now laugh to scorn the efforts of their enemies to force back the tidal wave. They remind one of the good old woman with mop and broom trying to keep her yard dry, as the swelling tide of the Atlantic rose higher and higher.—Exchange.

"THE war on the middlemen is foolish," say certain editors; "middlemen are indispensable to the community." True, and so are drones indispensable in a bee-hive; but if you will watch, you will see the little bees some sunshiny day carrying out the supernumerary drones and dispatching them. If this was not done the drones would consume so much honey that there would not be enough left for the workers.—Columbus (Miss.) Patron of Husbandry.

THE political status of the grange is thus defended by the Parsons (Kansas) Sun: "When the Granger comes to vote, he concludes that he will vote, first for his principles, and, secondly, the man he votes for he must know is a man of integrity and in full sympathy with the principles and policies of government that the grange and its influences have brought him. The Republican Grangers will not vote for a railway monopolist if forty Republican conventions have indorsed him. The Democratic Granger will not vote for such a man, though Jackson should rise from the dead and tell him to vote the straight Democratic ticket. As the individual Granger acts, so will the grange as a body act."

As an evidence of the money-saving connected with a proper organization and co-operation of granges in any given county or section, we would instance the following: Such an organization in Centralia, Mo., recently established a purchasing agency, embracing a district of thirty miles square. The value of farming implements which passed through the agency in one year, was $93,530, on which the commission usually charged would have been $28,058. In this case, the agent's charges were just $4,676.50—thus saving to that little district $23,382.50 in one year. Our farmer friends who have never united in this movement, and our various friends as well, may scratch their heads at such things; but a little figuring will show how easy it may be done by concentration of effort.

THE time of the year is fast drawing nigh when the country will swarm with peddlers, patent-right swindlers, and traveling men of all grades and callings. The best plan is to always buy of home merchants, from the very reason that traveling tradesmen have no inducement to be honest. They never expect to sell to you again, and it is their purpose to make as much as possible in their single trade. The home merchant, as a rule, sells cheaper, has better goods, remains in the neighborhood, helps pay the taxes, and is always ready to compete in prices with anybody who dispenses goods in the country. He take the farmers' produce in exchange for goods, buys wood and other necessaries for his household from the farmer, and it is wrong, as well as unprofitable, to buy goods of tramps, whose only desire is to bleed his victim of every cent possible. The best way is to firmly refuse to deal one cent's worth with any peddler of groceries or dry goods.—Exchange.

Recollections of Charles Sumner.

Charles Sumner was a faithful correspondent. He wrote many letters, and rarely used an amanuensis. Even his longest speeches came from his own hand. His industry was prodigious. He liked his work. He read eagerly and carefully. He was intensely systematic in his literary labors. About his own affairs, especially about his money matters, he seemed to have no rule. Art and books were his idols. Conversation with him was the key that opened many histories—not discussion nor controversy, but conversation with friends, in which, of course, he led the way without monopolizing the time. To him, more than any other man, certainly more than to any other man I ever met, could be justly applied the phrase that he possessed a full mind. He literally overran with information, and delighted to communicate it. Like a fountain, he was alternately giving and receiving. Uncommonly varied in his resources, he was, therefore, uncommonly interesting. I have sat with him in a mixed company, which by its very mixture abjured politics, and he talked better about general subjects than any man present. I have heard him describe an opera as accurately and minutely as if he had been a composer. His knowledge of the great painters, old and new, was complete. He was always a student of the law, and nothing gave him greater pleasure than to meet an old jurist. Nobody can read his speeches without seeing that he was a linguist, and his love for antique relics was almost a passion.

You never met Charles Sumner in what is called dishabille. He was always careful of his person—never what is called "foppish," but every article of his dress seemed to become him. In nothing were his habits better exhibited than in the furniture and arrangement of his household, including his table. Everything was neat, clean and sweet, and I have more than once remarked to him that the ever-present evidences of care and tidiness in his rooms seemed to evince the constant presence of a female hand—a remark which always provoked a quiet smile or a pleasant retort.

Jury Trials Two Centuries Ago.

Once it was dangerous for the box to differ from the bench, a jury daring to assert an opinion of their own being liable to find themselves thrown upon the tender mercies of the Star Chamber. Instances, indeed, says a writer in Chambers' Journal, are not wanting of the judge taking upon himself to punish jurymen for not following directions. Penn, the Quaker, was instrumental in freeing them of this terror. When he and Mead were brought before the Lord Mayor and the Recorder, in London, charged with preaching in Grace-church street, the jury were thrice sent back to reconsider their verdict, and shape it to the desired pattern. The last time they were locked up for the night, but the morning found them of the same mind; and "Not guilty" was still their award.

"I am sorry," said the irate Recorder—"I am sorry you have followed your own judgments and opinions rather than the good advice that was give you. I pray that my life be kept out of your hands. But for this the court fines you forty marks a man, and commands imprisonment till paid.

The four hundred and eighty marks not being forthcoming, the twelve really good men and true were consigned to durance vile in Newgate. A writ of habeas corpus soon opened the prison-doors, and the case was referred to a full bench of twelve Judges, who pronounced the fining and imprisonment to be contrary to law. The jurymen subsequently obtained exemplary damages for false imprisonment.

Cannon Made of Ice.

A hollow cylinder will bear a greater strain than a solid one. Many of us know by experiment what a hard pressure an egg will resist when placed endwise between the hands. This curious strength in a round but weak substance is due to the exact, orderly arrangement of their particles, i. e., in perfect curves. A memorable illustration was seen in the mock artillery set to play guard in front of that creation of imperial whim, the ice palace of Catherine of Russia. Before the palace stood six cannons of ice, and two mortars, formed like cast pieces. The cannons were six-pounders, which are commonly loaded with three pounds of powder; these, however, were loaded with a quarter of a pound, and carried a ball of stuffed hem, and sometimes of iron. The balls, at a distance of sixty paces, passed through a board two inches in thickness; the ice of the cannon could not have been more than three or four inches in thickness, and yet it resisted the force of the explosion.

THE CALIFORNIA ACORN CROP.—The acorn crop of California is remarkable for its irregularity. In a majority of years the harvest is light, or fails utterly, and the Digger Indians, who subsist principally on them, have learned well the necessity of storing them away in their rude wicker granaries when there is a good crop. Indeed, some tribes observe an annual dance, accompanied with religious ceremonies, to propitiate the spirits and insure an abundant yield of acorns. When the crop is good, it is very good, for the oak forests of California are so thin and park-like that every tree produces to its utmost capacity, almost as it would in a cultivated orchard. For several years the yield had been very meager, but last fall it was simply enormous. The whole earth underneath each tree was literally covered. The Indians selected only those trees having the largest nuts, and climbing up, whipped them off in myriads with poles, until the trees looked as if they had been scourged in a mighty hail-storm. Even white men gathered them and sacked them up by scores of bushels for winter provender for stock. All kinds of stock devoured them greedily, notwithstanding which the supply lasted all winter.

ONE of Gough's stories was a neat hit at those dilatory people who are always behind time. Some one said to a person of this class, "I see that you belong to the three-handed people." "Three-handed—that's rather uncommon, isn't it?" "Oh, no, common enough—two hands like other people—and a leetle behind-hand."

CREED.

I believe, if I should die
And you should kiss my eyelids when I lie
  Cold, dead, and dumb to all the world contains,
The folded orbs would open at thy breath,
And from its exile in the Isles of Death
  Life would come gladly back along my veins.

I believe, if I were dead,
And you upon my lifeless heart should tread,
  Not knowing what the poor clod chanced to be,
It would find sudden pulse beneath the touch
Of him it ever loved in life so much,
  And throb again, warm, tender, true to thee.

I believe, if on my grave,
Hidden in woody deeps, or by the wave,
  Your eyes should drop some warm tears of regret,
From every salty seed of your dear grief
Some fair, sweet blossom would leap into leaf
  To prove death could not make my love forget.

I believe, if I should fade
Into those mystic realms where light is made,
  And you should long once more my face to see,
I would come forth upon the hills of night,
And gather stars like fagots, till thy sight
  Led by their beacon blaze, fell full on me!

I believe my faith in thee,
Strong as my life, so nobly placed to be,
  I would as soon expect to see the sun
Fall like a dead king from his height sublime,
His glory stricken from the throne of time,
  As thee unworth the worship thou hast won.

I believe who has not loved
Hath half the treasure of his life unproved;
  Like one who, with the grape within his grasp,
Drops it, with all its crimson juice unpressed,
And all its luscious sweetness left unguessed,
  Out from his careless and unheeding clasp.

I believe love, pure and true,
Is to the soul a sweet, immortal dew,
  That gems life's petals in its hours of dust;
The waiting angels see and recognize
The rich crown-jewel, Love, of Paradise,
  When life falls from us like a withered husk.

The Editor as a Derrick for Politicians.

It costs the proprietors of the Appeal $300 a day to publish the paper, and we cannot see how aspirants for office can expect, at our expense, to use our columns to aid them in getting an office worth ten, fifteen or twenty thousand dollars per annum. If there be an honor in the office of Governor, or a seat in the Legislature, "Many Voters" who would confer this honor should not seek to do so at the expense of others, and must pay for the praise they lavish upon the men they would exalt. The press has too long been "hewers of wood and drawers of water" for political aspirants, seeking high position. Editors have too long been the ladder, to be kicked over by men who have secured offices which enriched them. Candidates in search of offices of honor or profit can find access to our columns; but their ubiquitous friend, "Many Voters," cannot herald their greatness or extol their merits and many virtues at our expense.—Memphis Appeal.

A HUNDRED YEARS AGO.—It is just 100 years ago since the first settlement of Kentucky. In April, 1774, the terrible massacre of the Logan family by the Indians took place, and Daniel Boone, who hated the Indian as much as he relished the Indian life, was longing for revenge, when a messenger came riding down the valley of the Ohio with his steed in a foam; a messenger from the royal Gov. Dunmore, of Virginia, seeking one Boone, Daniel Boone, a woodman who had been in the West, to go westward to the falls of the Ohio, and conduct surveying parties and protect them as they went. Boone started on his perilous journey on the 6th of June, 1774, reached and reconducted the surveyors in safety to the settlements, the distance being 800 miles and the time two months. The Governor rewarded Boone by employing him on a larger scale for settling the West. James Harrod, the founder of Harrodsburgh, built the first house in what was then termed the West, a log cabin raised in the forest in April, 1774.

Select Story.

A HURRIED COURTSHIP.

I was a young man possessed of sufficient means to enable me to live at my ease, and refrain from labor of any kind, when suddenly there came a blow that scattered my property to the winds, and forced me to employ my labor and wits in the general struggle of gaining a living. The blow came in the shape of the failure of a large firm in which all my capital was invested.

After securing a clerkship in the house of a creditor of our late firm, my first care was to look up a less expensive boarding-house than the fashionable one in which I was living. I inserted an advertisement in several widely circulated city papers, asking for reasonable board in a strictly private family, and of course received a multitude of answers by next post. Out of this motley installment of epistles, there was but one which pleased me, and that one I decided to answer in person immediately.

Grace Kingsley was the name of the favored landlady writing to me, and the latter stated that her house was entirely private, having no other boarders whatever. I was much pleased with the fair delicate handwriting, and an idea to me that Grace was a young and facinating widow. I was not disappointed when I reached the house, and my ringing at the door-bell was answered by the lady herself. She invited me into the parlor in a manner so courteous, and yet so modest, that I had fallen desperately in love with her before I could cross the threshold.

I enjoyed a very pleasant chat with Mrs. Kingsley. During the conversation she informed me that her late husband had been in a fair way of business and at his death, which occurred a year previous, had left her in pretty comfortable circumstances. They had but one child; and this item of mortality I was graciously permitted to look upon, as it lay peacefully slumbering in its cradle. I also learned that the lady was living in the house quite alone, and desired a male boarder more as a protection than as a source of revenue. In conclusion, the lady looked so pretty, (she was quite young, not more than two or three and twenty) and the board so moderate, her companionship so inviting and she seemed so to trust me, and looked upon me so favorably that I would have been a heathen, dead to the charms and inducements of the sex, if I had not engaged board on the spot.

The next day I had my trunk removed to my new boarding place, and permanently established myself there. Before leaving my boarding house, a letter was handed me by the postman but I did not find time to examine it until I was comfortably in the parlor of Mrs Kingsley's cosy house.

Opening the letter I discovered it to be from a wealthy uncle of mine residing in Vermont, who regularly sent me a letter every year, but whom I had never seen. His epistles were always short and to the point, generally on account of the weather in his locality, and some good advice to me to take care of my money, as might be burdened with it before I was much older. I was always very glad to get this advice from him, as I regarded it as an intimation that I was to inherit his wealth on his decease.

One day, however, about a year previous, I received a letter from him which contained another topic besides those I have mentioned. My uncle made some pressing inquiries regarding my matrimonial prospects, and stated that if I was not already married, I should enter immediately into the wedded state, and let him know it or he never would be an uncle of mine.

Now, as my uncle lived in Vermont and I in Philadelphia I never anticipated the old man would pay me a visit and discover the falsehood, I wrote and informed him that I was not only married, but the father of a bouncing baby. This intelligence so pleased my uncle that he sent a gold goblet and silver pap-spoon to be presented to my child. I first sat down and wrote a very romantic letter to my uncle, thanking him for the present, and then went to the nearest jewelry store and turned both the gobet and the spoon onto cash, which I pocketed.

I received no further letters from my uncle until the one I read in Mrs. Kingsley's parlor. The postscript to this one not only astonished, but absolutely frightened me. It read as follow:

'P. S. I have never visited Philadelphia, so I have decided to drop at once and get a look at your wife and child. You may expect me about the 10th of the month.

'Good gracious! My Uncle is coming to visit me,' I exclaimed, 'and it is past the tenth of the month now! I don't know at what moment he may pop in. What am I to do for a wife and child?'

At that moment there came a terrible pull at the door bell, as if the man who pulled it imagined that he owned the house, and could make as much noise as he pleased. A sickening sensation took possession of me for I had a misgiving that it was my uncle.

Now as good fortune would have it Mrs Kingsley had gone out to a neighboring store for a few moments, and had requested me to have an eye on her child while she was gone, so it would'nt fall out of the cradle, and hurt itself. As I glanced at the cradle, and thought of my uncle at the door, a bright idea entered my mind. I determined, in case the visitor was my uncle, to claim the youthful occupant as my own.

The visitor proved to be my uncle. I knew him by the picture of him I had seen, and he likewise knew me by my photograph. After a mutual recognition and hand shaking, I ushered my honored relative into the parlor and introduced him to my newly-found offspring.

'There, uncle,' said I, 'is the first pledge of my married life. I assure you that I take pleasure in presenting to you my child.'

'It is a fat little youngster,' said my uncle, gazing at it admirably. 'By the way, what is it a boy or a girl?'

That was a knotty query for me to answer, for he was just as much acquainted with its gender as I was.—But it would not do to show ignorance on the subject, so I answered at hap-hazzard that it was a boy.

'I am sorry it is a boy,' said my uncle; 'there are too many boys in the family. Now if you had only produced a little blue eyed girl, you would have been more sensible.'

I assured him that I was sorry the gender did not suit, but hoped in the future his wishes would be gratified.

So far I had succeeded in deceiving my uncle, but the worst was, that when Mrs Kingsley returned, she might object to my claiming ownership to her child. Besides, to carry out my deception, I must find a wife as well as an infant, and Mrs Kingsley was the only one I could convently claim. The only difficulty was to get her to consent to the deception, and that might be one if I could only secure a private conversation with her before I introduced her to my uncle, then it would be all right.

I watched my opportunity, gained a chance and had an interview with her before she entered the room. I told her in a few hurried words, the extent of my difficulty, and how I had taken the liberty to act as papa to the little one. I then told her that I must find a wife somewhere, and begged her to allow me to introduce her to my uncle in that capacity. She laughed very heartily at the suggestion, said she could comprehend my difficulty, and consented to my proposal, and very roguishly warned me not to presume upon its recurrence.

We then entered the parlor, and I introduced her as my better half. My uncle was very much pleased with her and complimented me upon my good choice. Mrs. Kingsley, of course, colored most charmingly at his compliment, and I could plainly see that she could scarcely refrain from laughing.

"You have a fine boy here," said my uncle to Mrs. Kingsley, pointing to the cradle.

"Excuse me, sir," said she, coloring up again; "it's a girl."

I was dumbfounded. I was exposed in my iniquity. Would my uncle believe me after this? He looked from me to my pretty landlady with a puzzled countenance.

"Well, I always took it for a boy," was my answer, putting on a bold face, "but I suppose my wife knows best."

Here Mrs. Kingsley fairly screamed with laughter, and my uncle's stern face relaxed into an ironical smile.

"You are a nice father ain't you?" he said touching me with the point of his umbrella, "not to know the sex of your own child? Why, I knew it was a girl the moment I looked at it. But, Charley," he said, again addressing me, "what did you do with the goblet and pap-spoon I sent the little one?"

"Oh, they are perfectly safe, I assure you," I replied. "I have taken good care of them."

"Yes; but where in the deuce are they? I would like very much to take another look at them." Well, I have deposited them in a bank for safe keeping; but I can readily produce them—that is, in the course of a week's time."

He told me to do so he wanted to see them; and then I got out of the room for fear he might ask me some more perplexing questions.

A short time afterwards Mrs. Kingsley came to me in an adjoining room, room, and I saw immediately that something very humorous must have happened, for the corners of her lips were breaking into smiles.

"Do you know, sir, into what an awkward predicament you have got me?" she inquired, as she took a seat on the lounge by my side.

"Explain yourself," I said.

"Why, your uncle came to me a short time ago, and asked to see my marriage certificate, and said he had some money to settle on me immediately, but wanted to be sure that all was right, first."

"Did you expose me," I inquired anxiously.

"No, sir, I did not; for I never enter into a deception, or anything else by halves."

I was so elated that I could not withstand the temptation of embracing her. This did not make her angry, for she nestled her head cosily on my shoulder, and smiled serenely.

"What answer did you make him?" I asked

She hesitated a moment and then said:

"I promise to produce the marriage certificate."

"But we haven't got any," I then remarked

She indulged in a quiet little laugh to herself, but said nothing.

"Mrs. Kingsley—nay, my dear madam—no, I will call you my darling—we are both in a scrape, and there is but one way to get out of it. We must go and get married immediately. Will you be my wife?"

"I shall be delighted," she answered frankly, and seizing both my hands, she said she was ready for a frolic of any kind.

We lost no time I assure you. I dont think Mrs. Kingsley ever got into her Sunday clothes in her life before, while I spoiled two pairs of suspenders in my frantic endeavors to be on time. We quite astonished the parson by our haste, and at the conclusion of the ceremony I would have forgotten to give him the usual fee if he had not reminded me of it. We had secured the coveted marriage certificate, signed and sealed, and were now safely out of the difficulties as we thought. We had omitted one precaution, as we presented the certificate to my uncle. It was all right with the exception of the modern date.

"Why, how is this?" said my uncle through his specks. "I thought you were married over a year ago."

"So we were, uncle," I answered very solemnly.

"How comes it, then, that the certificate is dated to-day?" he asked in a voice of thunder.

We were struck speechless both my wife and I.

"Come," said my uncle, "I see there has been some trickery here. Own up to it, or I'll never forgive you."

I did own up to it and I told him the whole story. I expected it would make him angry but it didn't; for he laughed heartily, and said I was a clever rascal, and he was proud of me.

"But how about the gold goblet and pap-spoon? You haven't been drawing the wool over my eyes about them, too, have you, eh?"

I told the truth about the goblet and pap-spoon.

"Why, your'e a regular trickster," said my uncle. "I believe you would deceive Satan himself. But I won't get angry with you, for I use to play the same games when young."

In a word we became thoroughly reconciled, and my uncle settled upon me a sufficient income to enable me to quit my irksome duties as a clerk. He has gone back to Vermont, and I can but say in conclusion that when he pays us another visit I can show him several little people that I call my own, and without telling a falsehood.

Go West Through St. Louis.

To all who are seeking new homes in or are about to take a trip to Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, New Mexico, Nebraska, Oregon or California, we recommend a cheap, safe, quick and direct route by way of St. Louis, over the Missouri Pacific Through Line. It is equipped with fine Day Coaches, Buckeye Reclining Chair Cars, Pullman's Palace Sleepers, the famous Miller Safety Platform, and the celebrated Westinghouse Air-Brake, and runs its trains from St. Louis to principle points in the West without change. We believe that the Missouri Pacific Through Line has the best track of any road west of the Mississippi River, and with its superior equipment and unrivaled comforts for passengers, has become the great popular throughfare between the East and the West. Trains from the North South and East connect at St. Louis with trains of the Missouri Pacific, The Texas connection of this road is now completed, and passengers are offered a first class all-rail route from St. Louis to Texas, either over the Missouri, Kansas & Texas R. R. via Sedalia, over the Atlantic & Pacific R. R. via Vinita. For maps, time tables, information as to rates, routes, etc., address S. H. Thompson, Eastern Passenger Agent, Union Depot, Columbus, Ohio, or E. A. Ford, General Passenger Agent, St. Louis, Mo. Questions will be cheerfully and promptly answered.

They are just the customers we want to deal with, we will guarantee them No Middlemen shall eat the profits between them and us. We Retail all goods at Wholesale Prices, all our Teas, Coffees, Sugars, Spices, &c., are purchased direct of the Manufactures and Importers and as we sell direct to the consumers, whereas Middlemen add 50 per cent. to the cost. Some goods, say tea, the Importer sells to the Jobber at 10c per lb profit, the Jobber sells to the wholesale merchants 15c per lb profit, the wholesale merchant resells to the retail merchant at 20c per lb profit then then the retail merchant sells to the consumer at 25 to 50c per lb profit just as he gets it. All these intermediate profits we give our customers, and this is the secret of our immense tea trade. so with all goods we handle. We sell goods to save the profits of Middlemen

A HURRIED COURTSHIP.

I was a young man possessed of sufficient means to enable me to live at my ease, and refrain from labor of any kind, when suddenly there came a blow that scattered my property to the winds, and forced me to employ my labor and wits in the general struggle of gaining a living. The blow came in the shape of the failure of a large firm in which all my capital was invested.

After securing a clerkship in the house of a creditor of our late firm, my first care was to look up a less expensive boarding-house than the fashionable one in which I was living. I inserted an advertisement in several widely circulated city papers, asking for reasonable board in a strictly private family, and of course received a multitude of answers by next post. Out of this motley installment of epistles, there was but one which pleased me, and that one I decided to answer in person immediately.

Grace Kingsley was the name of the favored landlady writing to me, and the latter stated that her house was entirely private, having no other boarders whatever. I was much pleased with the fair delicate handwriting, and an idea to me that Grace was a young and facinating widow. I was not disappointed when I reached the house, and my ringing at the doorbell was answered by the lady herself. She invited me into the parlor in a manner so courteous, and yet so modest, that I had fallen desperately in love with her before I could cross the threshold.

I enjoyed a very pleasant chat with Mrs. Kingsley. During the conversation she informed me that her late husband had been in a fair way of business and at his death, which occurred a year previous, had left her in pretty comfortable circumstances They had but one child, and this item of mortality I was graciously permitted to look upon, as it lay peacefully slumbering in its cradle. I also learned that the lady was living in the house quite alone, and desired a male boarder more as a protection than as a source of revenue. In conclusion, the lady looked so pretty, (she was quite young, not more than two or three and twenty) and the board so moderate, her companionship so inviting and she seemed so to trust me, and looked upon me so favorably that I would have been a heathen, dead to the charms and inducements of the sex, if I had not engaged board on the spot.

The next day I had my trunk removed to my new boarding place, and permanently established myself there Before leaving my boarding house, a letter was handed me by the postman but I did not find time to examine it until I was comfortably in the parlor of Mrs Kingsley's cosy house.

Opening the letter I discovered it to be from a wealthy uncle of mine residing in Vermont, who regularly sent me a letter every year, but whom I had never seen. His epistles were always short and to the point, generally on account of the weather in his locality, and some good advice to me to take care of my money, as might be burdened with it before I was much older. I was always very glad to get this advice from him, as I regarded it as an intimation that I was to inherit his wealth on his decease.

One day, however, about a year previous, I received a letter from him which contained another topic besides those I have mentioned. My uncle made some pressing inquiries regarding my matrimonial prospects, and stated that if I was not already married, I should enter immediately into the wedded state, and let him know it or he never would be an uncle of mine.

Now, as my uncle lived in Vermont and I in Philadelphia I never anticipated the old man would pay me a visit and discover the falsehood, I wrote and informed him that I was not only married, but the father of a bouncing baby. This intelligence so pleased my uncle that he sent a gold goblet and silver pap-spoon to be presented to my child. I first sat down and wrote a very romantic letter to my uncle, thanking him for the present, and then went to the nearest jewelry store and turned both the gobet and the spoon onto cash, which I pocketed

I received no further letters from my uncle until the one I read in Mrs. Kingsley's parlor. The postscript to this one not only astonished, but absolutely frightened me. It read as follow:

'P. S. I have never visited Philadelphia, so I have decided to do so at once and get a look at your wife and child. You may expect me about the 10th of the month.

'Good gracious! My Uncle is coming to visit me,' I exclaimed, 'and it is past the tenth of the month now! I don't know at what moment he may pop in. What am I to do for a wife and child?

At that moment there came a terrible pull at the door bell, as if the man who pulled it imagined that he owned the house, and could make as much noise as he pleased. A sickening sensation took possession of me for I had a misgiving that it was my uncle

Now as good fortune would have it Mrs Kingsley had gone out to a neighboring store for a few moments, and had requested me to have an eye on her child while she was gone, so it would'nt fall out of the cradle, and hurt itself. As I glanced at the cradle, and thought of my uncle at the door, a bright idea entered my mind. I determined, in case the visitor was my uncle, to claim the youthful occupant as my own.

The visitor proved to be my uncle. I knew him by the picture of him I had seen, and he likewise knew me by my photograph. After a mutual recognition and hand shaking, I ushered my honored relative into the parlor and introduced him to my newly-found offspring.

'There, uncle,' said I, 'is the first pledge of my married life. I assure you that I take pleasure in presenting to you my child.'

'It is a fat little youngster,' said my uncle, gazing at it admirably. 'By the way, what is it a boy or a girl?'

That was a knotty query for me to answer, for he was just as much acquainted with its gender as I was.—But it would not do to show ignorance on the subject, so I answered at hap-hazzard that it was a boy.

'I am sorry it is a boy,' said my uncle; 'there are too many boys in the family. Now if you had only produced a little blue eyed girl, you would have been more sensible.'

I assured him that I was sorry the gender did not suit, but hoped in the future his wishes would be gratified

So far I had succeeded in deceiving my uncle, but the worst was, that when Mrs Kingsley returned, she might object to my claiming ownership to her child. Besides, to carry out my deception, I must find a wife as well as an infant, and Mrs Kingsley was the only one I could conveniently claim. The only difficulty was to get her to consent to the deception, and that might be one if I could only secure a private conversation with her before I introduced her to my uncle, then it would be all right.

I watched my opportunity, gained a chance and had an interview with her before she entered the room. I told her in a few hurried words, the extent of my difficulty, and how I had taken the liberty to act as papa to the little one. I then told her that I must find a wife somewhere, and begged her to allow me to introduce her to my uncle in that capacity. She laughed very heartily at the suggestion, said she could comprehend my difficulty, and consented to my proposal, and very rogueishly warned me not to presume upon its recurrence.

We then entered the parlor, and I introduced her as my better half. My uncle was very much pleased with her and complimented me upon my good choice. Mrs. Kingsley, of course, colored most charmingly at his compliment, and I could plainly see that she could scarcely refrain from laughing.

"You have a fine boy here," said my uncle to Mrs. Kingsley, pointing to the cradle.

"Excuse me, sir," said she, coloring up again; "it's a girl."

I was dumbfounded. I was exposed in my iniquity. Would my uncle believe me after this? He looked from me to my pretty landlady with a puzzled countenance.

"Well, I always took it for a boy," was my answer, putting on a bold face, "but I suppose my wife knows best."

Here Mrs. Kingsley fairly screamed with laughter, and my uncle's stern face relaxed into an ironical smile.

"You are a nice father ain't you?" he said touching me with the point of his umbrella, "not to know the sex of your own child? Why, I knew it was a girl the moment I looked at it. But, Charley," he said, again addressing me, "what did you do with the goblet and pap-spoon I sent the little one?"

"Oh, they are perfectly safe, I assure you," I replied. "I have taken good care of them."

"Yes; but where in the deuce are they? I would like very much to take another look at them." Well, I have deposited them in a bank for safe keeping; but I can readily produce them—that is, in the course of a week's time."

He told me to do so he wanted to see them; and then I got out of the room for fear he might ask me some more perplexing questions.

A short time afterwards Mrs. Kingsley came to me in an adjoining room, room, and I saw immediately that something very humorous must have happened, for the corners of her lips were breaking into smiles.

"Do you know, sir, into what an awkward predicament you have got me?" she inquired, as she took a seat on the lounge by my side.

"Explain yourself," I said.

"Why, your uncle came to me a short time ago, and asked to see my marriage certificate, and said he had some money to settle on me immediately, but wanted to be sure that all was right, first."

"Did you expose me," I inquired anxiously.

"No, sir, I did not; for I never enter into a deception, or anything else by halves."

I was so elated that I could not withstand the temptation of embracing her. This did not make her angry, for she nestled her head cosily on my shoulder, and smiled serenely.

"What answer did you make him?" I asked

She hesitated a moment and then said:

"I promise to produce the marriage certificate."

"But we haven't got any," I then remarked

She indulged in a quiet little laugh to herself, but said nothing.

"Mrs. Kingsley—nay, my dear madam—no, I will call you my darling—we are both in a scrape, and there is but one way to get out of it. We must go and get married immediately. Will you be my wife?"

"I shall be delighted," she answered frankly, and seizing both my hands, she said she was ready for a frolic of any kind.

We lost no time I assure you. I dont think Mrs. Kingsley ever got into her Sunday clothes in her life before, while I spoiled two pairs of suspenders in my frantic endeavors to be on time. We quite astonished the parson by our haste, and at the conclusion of the ceremony I would have forgotten to give him the usual fee if he had not reminded me of it. We had secured the coveted marriage certificate, signed and sealed, and were now safely out of the difficulties as we thought. We had omitted one precaution, as we presented the certificate to my uncle. It was all right with the exception of the modern date

"Why, how is this?" said my uncle through his specks. "I thought you were married over a year ago."

"So we were, uncle," I answered very solemnly.

"How comes it, then, that the certificate is dated to-day?" he asked in a voice of thunder.

We were struck speechless both my wife and I.

"Come," said my uncle, "I see there has been some trickery here. Own up to it, or I'll never forgive you."

I did own up to it and I told him the whole story. I expected it would make him angry but it didn't; for he laughed heartily, and said I was a clever rascal, and he was proud of me.

"But how about the gold goblet and pap-spoon? You haven't been drawing the wool over my eyes about them, too, have you, eh?"

I told the truth about the goblet and pap-spoon.

"Why, your'e a regular trickster," said my uncle. "I believe you would deceive Satan himself. But I won't get angry with you, for I use to play the same games when young"

In a word we became thoroughly reconciled, and my uncle settled upon me a sufficient income to enable me to quit my irksome duties as a clerk. He has gone back to Vermont, and I can but say in conclusion that when he pays us another visit I can show him several little people that I call my own, and without telling a falsehood.

THE SALOON-KEEPER'S WHY.

You ask why I surrendered,
My boon companions—why
I let a band of women
Throw sawdust in my eyes.

Well, I heard that they were coming,
And I meant to be prepared
With a stoic smile of welcome,
As if I neither feared nor cared.

I had placed my shop in order,
And tidied up myself;
Every bright decanter
Was shining from its shelf.

My best cigar was lighted;
I had well matured my plan
To show these canting women
How much I was a man.

I meant to treat them kindly,
Yet firmly, all the while,
And answer their upbraiding
With a predetermined smile.

They came—that band of women—
Calmly, serenely came,
With no deep voice of anger,
No seething words of blame;

A band of wives and mothers,
With faces worn with care,
A faith above all passion,
A hope beyond despair.

There were women from all stations—
The high, the low, the poor;
Some to lift the burden
Of the cross their sisters bore.

I saw one pale-faced woman,
Who once in mercy came
To soothe my stricken mother
Ere the husband rum had slain.

That woman then was shielded
From every sorrowing wave
By the arm that now was moldering
Within a drunkard's grave.

Her only son, who should have been
Her comfort, staff and stay,
I knew in wild delirium
Had left my shop that day.

So, comrades, latent manhood
Was wakened in my breast,
Till with a smitten conscience
I was praying with the rest.

But not with chastened sadness,
As those pitying women prayed,
That God would spare in mercy
The wrecks that rum had made;

But as I prayed in boyhood,
When in days of long ago
I stood beside my mother
In a drunkard's home of woe,

And prayed that every drinking shop,
From garret, hall or cell,
Was swept from off God's footstool
And emptied into hell!

'Twas thus I prayed, till sweet and low
Arose a pleading prayer
That God in mercy still would save
The loved ones everywhere.

So wait till you have heard them,
Heard that prayer of tears,
Of concentrated anguish
Bottled up for years—

Heard them wisely, calmly;
And when you've heard them, then—
Then history may tell the world
That all of you were men!

BARTON'S BABY.

Robert Archer, Esq., as he was wont to sign himself, was a bachelor of the most confirmed stamp. It was whispered that, years before, when he was "handsome Bob Archer," a young lady had jilted him, but most middle aged men can recall some passage in their lives in which a like event may have taken place, and this should hardly be admitted as an excuse for such disagreeable cynicism as characterized the life and sayings of Mr. Archer.

He always stoutly denied having been "refused," but once, in a moment of unguarded confidence, he acknowledged to Widger—the only man who had ever been known to establish anything approaching an intimacy with him—that he did once ask a young lady if she would marry him; "and," said Mr. Archer, with a rueful smile, "she said she'd rather be excused—and now," he added, with a look of self-congratulation, as one who, through his own long-sightedness, had escaped some terrible danger, "I'm mighty glad I excused her."

So the crusty old bachelor had arrived at the age of forty years, at which standpoint we find him, a rather good-looking man, with $25,000, a splendid constitution, and a hatred for babies that amounted to a positive mania.

Bob Archer—as we who have known him all his days shall call him—boarded at Mrs. Green's, on Charton street, and next door lived Mr. and Mrs. Barton, who were joint owners and sole proprietors of a strong-lunged and generally unpleasant infant about a year old.

It is a singular fact, and one worthy of notice, that each succeeding generation of babies that come wailing into the world are several shades better than their predecessors.

And when we reflect upon the number of people who claim to own the "best child that ever was," and who firmly assert that their baby "seldom or never cries," we are prone to wonder why it is that this age should be so much in advance of the preceding one, and why everybody's baby should be so superior to everybody's else baby.

The Barton baby, of course, in the eyes and arms of its proper parents, was one of these prodigies of tearless and noiseless infancy. "Run in and see Mary and the baby," was the oft-repeated invitation of Barton. "That baby, sir, is really the best child—" and then Barton would meander on in a most exasperating way, while Archer would mentally wish his visitor anything but blessings as he listened to the ecomiums on infancy so fondly indulged in by the happy parent.

The first time that this cordial invitation had been given, Archer had replied, with far more frankness than politeness, that he wasn't any hand for ladies' society, "and as for babies—" here he muttered something under his breath eulogistic of King Herod's decree, which, fortunately, was unheard by Barton.

The bewildered stare with which that latter gentleman had favored him, at such a declaration of heresy in regard to female society, caused Bob Archer to somewhat modify his ungracious answer, and to add vaguely that "some time" he would "see about it."

Mrs. Barton, who was a pretty, blue-eyed little woman, had a brother boarding with her, aged fifteen, who, I grieve to state, was a very naughty boy, and at the Tieverton Academy, which he attended, his exploits were a source of continued annoyance to the teachers and of mingled wonder and admiration to his schoolmates. And yet he was one of the best-hearted boys in the world, only for the mischievous element that seemed a part of his nature. He was always duly sorry for his transgressions, and his fits of penitence have been known to last a full hour.

But between Mr. Archer and Charlie there was a feud, originating from a little of Charlie's playfulness, and it came about in this wise:

The former gentleman was given to wearing a stand-up collar, surrounded by a very stiff and clerical-looking white neck handkerchief, which Charlie having often observed, proceeded, in the absence of Mr. Archer, to obtain possession of a large and remarkably tall Cochin China rooster that belonged to Mrs. Green—one of that cheerful species of bird with a voice like a fog whistle and spurs like marlin-spikes, which make the small hours of the morning hideous with unreasonable crowing.

Several attempts had been made by Mrs. Green's lodgers to dispose of this remarkable bird, by poison and other foul means, but, owing to a constitution naturally strong and a digestion unimpaired by trifles, it had become a mooted question among the enemies of this rooster as to whether anything short of a can of nitro-glycerine would have any effect whatever upon his stomach.

At the expense of a pair of scratched hands, Charlie had succeeded in capturing the unhappy bird, which he immediately proceeded to invest with a huge paper collar and tie, after which he turned him loose in the street, where unfeeling and heartless people declared that he resembled Bob Archer to a marvelous degree.

When that gentleman returned from a down-town walk, his eyes were greeted with this singular apparition stalking majestically up and down the pavement, to the great admiration and interest of a large crowd of youths, who were by no means sparing in their remarks concerning the resemblance between the feathered biped and Mr. A.

Afterward, when the latter gentleman had discovered that Charlie was the author of this graceless trick, he had in the first flush of his wrath threatened the boy with a caning. And Charlie, I regret exceedingly to state, had immediately assumed a pugilistic attitude, and, revolving his fists rapidly (he measured full five feet three), after the supposed manner of the late John C. Heenan, he had asserted that he should like to see him (Mr. Archer) "try it on," and had then muttered something in reference to "putting a head" on some person or persons not specified.

It is needless for me at this point to attempt to inculcate a moral lesson. Every well-regulated boy who may read this story will readily see that Charlie's act was very wrong.

It was all bad enough; but, as if not satisfied, this bad boy stole a stuffed monkey from the case in Dr. Adams' study, and fastened a pair of large green-glass goggles astride its nose, and encircling its neck with a strip of red flannel, he inclosed the same in a band-box, and writing on the cover of the box, "With the compliments of Robert Archer, Esq.," he dispatched it, per small boy, to the residence of Miss Rebecca Fletcher, who was a single young lady of eight-and-thirty seasons, popularly supposed to cherish an unrequited affection for Mr. Archer.

Miss Fletcher fell into the most rigid hysterics upon the receipt of this cheerful present (I do not wonder at it), and the paternal Fletcher, who was a choleric old gentleman, hastily loaded his double-barreled gun, with the avowed determination of seeking Mr. Archer's life. But, fortunately, Charlie's share in the matter was discovered in time to save Mr. Archer from the wrath of the aged party referred to, and Charlie was threatened with trouncing number two, which, on the whole, I am sorry he did not get, for it is a sad thing to send a dead monkey with spectacles on and a red rag round its neck as a present to a lady.

One evening Mr. and Mrs. Barton were invited to take tea at a neighbor's, and, as the servant was tripping her light fantastic toes at a dance down town, it became necessary to leave the youth in question in charge of the baby. It was with the greatest reluctance that Mrs. B., after numberless embraces of the infant and instructions to Charlie (who was absorbed in the perusal of one of Oliver Optic's most incredible stories) as to the location of a bottle with a gum muzzle containing the necessary nourishment, left the hope of the Barton family, and when fairly under way she ran back for the purpose of one last, smothering embrace of the "tiddy little sing," whatever that may signify.

But hardly had the door finally closed upon Mrs. Barton than her juvenile brother laid down his book, and after executing a species of triumphant war-dance, at the same time whistling softly the bars of a popular melody, he surveyed the sleeping infant with a triumphant air and muttered, "Reckon old Archer'll be a little s'prised when he comes to see what he's got for a present," after which mysterious words he took a market basket from the closet, and placing the child with an infinitude of wraps therein, departed from the room.

Mr. Archer was ruminating alone by the sitting-room fire, with his feet elevated somewhat above the level of his head, the family of Greens having gone out to spend the evening, when a sharp ring at the door-bell brought him to his normal position, and seizing the lamp he opened the front door, and beheld a market basket.

"That butcher's boy must be in a hurry," remarked Archer, as, shutting the door, he set the basket down with a crash—when, to his infinite horror and dismay, a yell like that of a juvenile fiend burst from the interior of the same, and as he exclaimed "By Jove! it's—it's—a baby!" he sat down on the front stairs and a cool perspiration ran the whole length of his spinal column.

"What on earth shall I do?" muttered the wretched man, as he cautiously approached the resting-place of the child, whose shrieks became more frantic. With the courage of desperation he proceeded to uplift the infant—fortunately right side up—but as he awkwardly attempted to hush its cries by saying "Shoo—shoo now"—the cries were redoubled, and Mr. Archer began to think darkly of the way in which young kittens are disposed of.

In most well-regulated stories, where a baby is left, under these or any other circumstances, when it is found it always looks sweetly into its discoverer's face and "coos" (which I believe is the correct expression), or stretches its little arms to be taken up, or smiles so sweetly, or something of the kind.

This, being a real flesh-and-blood baby, did nothing of the kind. But it choked, and roared, and squirmed, and turned purple in the face to that extent that Mr. Archer, in his desperation, was about to take it out to the kitchen sink, and pump water upon its head, when, to add to his perplexity and dismay, the door-bell rang again.

"Possibly the wretched mother may have repented deserting her child," was the cheering thought that passed through his mind, as he made a rapid rush to the door, accompanied by a fresh outburst from the interesting infant.

But, to his dismay, who should be there but Miss Fletcher, who had come to call on the Green family.

"Why, Mr. Archer—I didn't know—I thought—you didn't like children?" was the remark of the astonished lady, as Mr. A., with a scarlet countenance, attempted to make himself heard above the din, and to explain the situation.

"Like 'em!" shouted Mr. Archer, as though Miss Fletcher had been hard of hearing; "I'm going to drown this—this—wretched being, if I can find a salt-bag anywhere handy," and we are not altogether sure but that he would have made his threat good, had not Miss Fletcher, after a moment's hesitation as to the "propriety" of the thing, stepped into the entry, and taken the child in her arms, and then, to the wonder and awe of Mr. Archer, there was a sudden cessation of the tumult, and as the distorted features settled down to something like their original shape, Miss Fletcher exclaimed, as she trotted the now pacified baby on her knee.

"Why, it's little Daisy Barton!" And then Mr. Archer, in a tumult of delight at the discovery, grew animated and agreeable, and they both agreed that it was some of "that terrible boy's" doings.

"After all," said Mr. Archer, as they sat in the other room, and the fire threw flickering shadows over Miss Fletcher's soft brown hair, and tinged her still round cheek with a becoming flush, "there is more drollery than malice in that boy's composition, and I can hardly blame him for a trick which has given me the pleasure of Miss Fletcher's company."

"For, sooth to say, the old bachelor, as he sat there watching the lady in question, who, fortunately, had on her most becoming dress and her best braids of false hair, with just a tinge of rouge on her face, had made the discovery that Miss Fletcher looked really quite pretty; and the maiden lady showed a beautifully white and even set of teeth when she smilingly thanked Mr. Archer for his compliment.

Meanwhile, Mr. and Mrs. Barton were hastening homeward, the latter full of apprehensions in regard to the fate of her babe, and much self-reproach at having been so unwise as to have left it in the care of her rattle-pated brother.

The youth, who had watched the discovery of the babe, and the subsequent call of Miss Fletcher through the blinds, who had not been able to devise a scheme for the recovery of the infant, resolved to brazen it out, and was very busily engaged in strapping a pair of skates as little Mrs. Barton opened the door and made a rush for the cradle.

"Good heavens! where—what have you done with Daisy, Charles?" was the terrible exclamation of the mother as she discovered its absence.

"Don't worry, sis," said the impurtabable youth, with a patronizing air, while Mr. Barton glared on him in speechless indignation from the door. "You see, Mr. Archer, next door, got sort of lonesome, and came in and borrered Daisy for a little while."

"And," continued that unabashed youth, "Miss Fletcher and he is playin' keep house, and so I—"

Mrs. Barton waited no longer, but rushed into the next door just in time to find Bob Archer's arm cleverly enfolding Miss Fletcher's waist, and the baby looking as smiling as possible in the latter lady's lap.

Mr. Archer jumped hastily to his feet and muttered an incoherent remark about "trying to amuse the child." Miss Fletcher blushed violently, but the general explanation that followed, served to cover the mutual embarrassment of the two most interested parties.

The baby was given up, and Miss Fletcher was accompanied home by Mr. Archer, and next day the town was electrified by the news of their engagement.

For love, like the measles, is apt to go very hard with elderly people, and the old bachelor who had so long resisted Cupid's darts had fallen a victim at last.

Mrs. Barton administered a sound scolding to her mischievous brother who only chuckled as he recalled the expression that was visible on Mr. Archer's face when he first discovered the trick (for Charley had peeped through the entry-blinds) but of course he promised never to do so again.

Mr. Barton also gravely narrated the examples of several vicious boys whom he had known, who all came to an untimely end, but I fear the lessons were not heeded by that bad boy, who was at that moment, shoeing the family cat with paper.

But as Mr. Archer, who is happily married to Miss Fletcher, alway attributes his present matrimonial felicity to the events of that evening; he and the boy are on the best terms, and Charley is now settling down to be quite a steady youth.

He occasionally breaks out in some new vein of mischief, but is gradually coming to see the errors of his ways, and conducts himself accordingly.

The baby—the unconscious instrument of the above narrated incidents, now has begun to talk, and here, if you please, I will leave it. I am not fond of babies.

THERE is nothing a woman is more deeply concerned in than her white-washing, or nothing she is so conceited about as her own efforts in that line, if it doesn't "streak." To keep it from "streaking" is her highest ambition, and when she has succeeded, every woman within a mile is dragged in to see it, and her unfortunate husband is forced to admire it until he hurts his neck. Every woman has a natural desire to see her husband whitewash. When she has a job of it on hand she invariably proffers it to him with a strong expression of doubt in his ability to perform it, a distrust he hastens to confirm with cheerful alacrity. Man's antipathy to whitewashing arises mainly from having at some time or another stepped on the handle of a full brush reposing across a pail and thrown about two quarts of the mixture over himself and the furniture, besides tipping over the pail, and emptying its contents in his shoes.—Danbury News.

GLAD TIDINGS FOR THE SLAVES OF KING ALCOHOL.—How many a manly form is palsied; how many a noble mind is destroyed; how many a priceless soul lost, through the curse of strong drink! To the despairing victims of the Satanic tyrant, Alcohol, whose shattered nerves, and trembling limbs, and racking headaches, seem to find no relief except in the renewed use of the fatal poison which brings them every day nearer to their miserable end, we announce glad tidings of great joy: DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS contain not a single drop of Alcohol in any form, but are a sovereign remedy for the ills of drunkenness. They restore tone and strength to the system, and entirely eradicate the pernicious appetite for liquor. Try a few bottles of VINEGAR BITTERS, and you will never crave strong spirits again, but find your health repaired, your mind restored, and be once more a man in the best sense. Health is cheap when VINEGAR BITTERS are $1 a bottle. 40

"For the Blood is the Life."

See Deuteronomy, chap. xii. verse 23. The blood being the source from which our systems are built up and from which we derive our mental as well as physical capabilities, how important that it should be kept pure. If it contains vile, festering poisons all organic functions are weakened thereby. Settling upon important organs, as the lungs, liver or kidneys, the effect is most disastrous. Hence it behooves everyone to keep their blood in a perfectly healthy condition, and more especially does this apply at this particular season of the year than at any other. No matter what the exciting cause may be, the real cause of a large proportion of all diseases is bad blood. Now Dr. Pierce does not wish to place his Golden Medical Discovery in the catalogue of quack patent nostrums by recommending it to cure every disease, nor does he so recommend it; on the contrary, there are hundreds of diseases that he acknowledges it will not cure; but what he does claim is this, that there is but one form of blood disease that it will not cure, and that disease is cancer. He does not recommend his Discovery for that disease, yet he knows it to be the most searching blood-cleanser yet discovered, and that it will free the blood and system of all other known blood poisons, be they animal, vegetable or mineral. The Golden Discovery is warranted by him to cure the worst forms of Skin Diseases, as all forms of Blotches, Pimples and Eruptions, also all Glandular Swellings, and the worst form of Scrofulous and Ulcerated Sores of Neck, Legs or other parts, and all Scrofulous Diseases of the Bones, as White Swellings, Fever Sores, Hip Joint and Spinal Diseases, all of which belong to Scrofulous diseases.

CONFIRMED HIP-JOINT DISEASE CURED.

W. GROVE STATION, Ia., July 14, 1872.

DR. R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR—My wife first became lame nine years ago. Swellings would appear and disappear on her hip, and she was gradually becoming reduced, and her whole system rotten with disease. In 1871 a swelling broke on her hip, discharging large quantities, and since that time there are several openings. Have had five doctors at an expense of $125, who say nothing will do any good but a surgical operation.

July 16th, 1873, he writes thus: "My wife has certainly received a great benefit from the use of your Discovery, for she was not able to get off the bed and was not expected to live a week when she commenced using it a year ago. She has been doing most of her work for over six months. Has used twenty bottles and still using it. Her recovery is considered as almost a miracle, and we attribute it all to the use of your valuable medicine. I can cheerfully recommend it as a blood-purifier and strength-restorer.

"J. M. ROBINSON."

LIBERALITY OF PHYSICIANS.—It has always been said that physicians would disparage any remedy, however valuable, which they did not originate themselves. This has been disproved by their liberal course towards DR. J. C. AYER's preparations. They have adopted them into general use in their practice, which shows a willingness to countenance articles that have intrinsic merits which deserve their attention. This does the learned profession great credit, and effectually contradicts the prevalent erroneous notion that their opposition to proprietary remedies is based in their interest to discard them. We have always had confidence in the honorable motives of our medical men, and are glad to find it sustained by the liberal welcome they accord to such remedies as AYER & Co.'s inimitable remedies, even though they are not ordered in the books, but are made known to the people through the newspapers.—New Orleans Delta.

DR. WILHOFT'S ANTI-PERIODIC OR FEVER AND AGUE TONIC!—Wilhoft's Tonic has established itself as the real infallible chill cure. On account of their long and extensive experience, they can cure cases cheaper than it can be done elsewhere.

"HORSE-MEN," and others who pretend to know, say that the following directions had better be observed in using Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders: Give a horse a tablespoonful every night for a week; the same every other night for 4 or 6 nights; the same for a milch cow, and twice as much for an ox. The addition of a little fine salt will be an advantage.

WE have heard recently of several severe cases of spinal disease cured by Johnson's Anodyne Liniment; one case of a man forty five years old, who had not done a day's work for four years. The back should first be washed, then rubbed with a coarse towel. Apply the Liniment cold, and rub in well with the hand.

PROBABLY no one disease is the cause of so much bodily misery and unhappiness (and the disease is almost universal among the American people) as dyspepsia. Its causes are many and various, lying chiefly in the habits of our people. The remedy is simple and effectual. Use Dr Wishart's Great American Dyspepsia Pills. They never fail to cure.

CINCINNATI, June 11, 1873.

C. C. OLIN & CO., Waukesha, Wis.: Having used your water from the Mineral Rock Spring, Waukesha, Wis., for the diabetes, I have found great relief from the use of the same. Before I commenced using this water, my physician reported to me the specific gravity of my urine was 33, and after using it for twenty days the specific gravity of the urine was reduced to 21, showing a great improvement, and finding great relief in not being compelled to urinate so frequently. I had other waters, but give it as my opinion that the Mineral Rock Spring is preferable. And I do earnestly recommend it to all who are afflicted with the disease commonly known as Diabetes.

Respectfully yours, ALFRED WILSON,
Dept. Coll. Int. Rev., No. 8 W. Third Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

HUDSON, Wis., Jan. 2, 1873.

MESSRS. C. C. OLIN & CO.—Dear Sirs: I am astonished at the immediate benefit received from the use of your healing water. I commenced using the water as directed, and found a marked change, reducing specific gravity of urine 32 down to 20 in three days, producing a moist skin and a direct perspiration, making an entire change for the better in my digestion. I also find it beneficial to the liver. Since drinking the water, I rest much better at night, and without being disturbed, as I usually was before, from two to three times during every night. Thinking of visiting your spring in the summer, believing the water to do all that you claim, and knowing the favorable results in my own case, you will please express the forty gallons immediately, as I am satisfied that it does not lose any of its healing properties by shipping. I think your price very reasonable, and will advertise your Spring all I can, for the benefit of invalids suffering with those incurable diseases of Bright's Disease and Saccharine Diabetes, as I know they can be immediately relieved by drinking Mineral Rock Spring Water. With kindest regards, yours truly, GEO. JONES.

Scaring off Cannibals.

Magruder's oldest boy came staggering through the door of the kitchen the other day with his face as white as the reputation of one of the early martyrs. When his mother, in great alarm, asked him what was the matter, he said he thought he must have caught cold somehow. But, as he proceeded to the window the next moment and began to permit his breakfast to come to light, the explanation was not regarded as perfectly satisfactory, and the old lady instituted an investigation upon her own account. In the first pocket that she explored she discovered a plug of tobacco from which a mouthful had been removed; and then, as the cause of Henry's illness was evident, she proceeded to hunt up Henry's father for the purpose of getting him to remonstrate with the culprit. When Magruder arrived he went to the closet and selected a favorite bedslat, and, approaching Henry, he sternly asked:

"What d' you mean by chawin' terbacker? Haven't I told you often enough to let that ornery stuff alone? I've half a mind to bang thunder out o' you. What d' you mean, say?"

"I was only tryin' to scare off the cannibals," blubbered Henry. "I don't want to chew tobacco. I only wanted to keep 'em from eatin' me. I'll cross my heart to it."

"Cannibals! cannibals!" exclaimed Magruder, "what are you talkin' about? Commere to me this minute! Harriet, the boy's crazy; that terbacker's shattered his intelleck. Tell me what you mean, quick, or I'll shake the sawdust out o' you."

"I saw it in the paper," said Henry, "and I thought maybe they'd ketch me some time and I'd better get ready for 'em. I was tryin' to chew so's I'd get soaked with tobacco. If you don't believe me read that," and he fumbled in his pockets until he produced the following extract from a health journal:

"It is said of the cannibals that they will not eat the flesh of a tobacco-chewer, because it is so highly charged with the taste and odor of tobacco."

When Magruder finished the paragraph he said: "Well, I'll let you off this time, but, mind me, don't you chaw that stuff agin. No cannibal is goin' to eat you any way, and, if any of 'em come foolin' around here, you call me and I'll smash 'em with this yer bedslat."

Then Henry rose from his couch and went out to hunt for the plug of tobacco which his mother had tossed through the window. It seems to me that those health journals are demoralizing things.—Max Adeler.

A Hasty Yet Satisfactory Marriage.

A young lady of Alabama, visiting in Memphis, was lately walking along the streets with a young gentleman, when he jokingly proposed to step into a church hard by and get married; the young lady assented, and started toward the church. When the young man saw that she was disposed to humor his joke, he backed down and acknowledged himself beat. Proceeding still further they met a mutual acquaintance, a bachelor business man, and the lady's companion told business how she had backed him out on the matrimonial proposition, whereupon business remarked to her, "You can't back me out." She answered, "Yes I can." The parties laughed and chatted a little, when they started off to get the license, each supposing the other would give it up, but the document was duly procured, and the matter began to look serious. The next thing was to tie the knot; at length a preacher was found. By this time both parties began to draw long breaths, but neither would give up to the other. They entered the church, and the preacher pronounced the words that made them husband and wife, and there was no flinching from the vows; neither would take a "dare," and the result was a marriage, without any subsequent desire for a divorce. It would be wonderful relief to many a timid swain, if this daring business were a thing of more common occurrence.

Arbitration vs. War.

A lynx and a wildcat were stealthily approaching from opposite directions a dozing pheasant. The lynx, however, was rather before the wildcat, and had but just secured his prey, when his rival put in an appearance, and the following angry discussion took place:

Wildcat—"How dare you poach on my ground? I've lived here all my life and that bird's mine."

Lynx—"I don't care. I caught it, and I mean to eat it."

Wildcat—"You shan't."

Lynx—"I will."

A terrible struggle then took place, but although they both fought desperately for a long time it proved to be a drawn battle.

The wild cat then said, "Suppose we call in the lion and accept arbitration in the matter?"

"Agreed!" said the lynx.

Just fancy their mutual chagrin when they found that in the very thick of the fight a neighbor had slipped unobserved away with the prize.

"Oh!" said the lynx, "why didn't we think of arbitration and mutual concession before the battle? We have gained nothing by the war; we have lost what we fought about, and inflicted injuries on ourselves which may take a long, long time to heal. Yes, it is certainly better to settle differences by arbitration rather than by war."

Feline Sagacity.—A man named McGraw, living three miles west of Lansing, Mich., left his family—consisting of five motherless children, the oldest nine years—asleep in bed on the night of the 19th, to go on an errand to a neighbor's. When he returned, about 11 p. m., he found his house burned down, with everything it contained, except children, bureau and cat. All the children would have perished if they had not been awakened by the cat pawing their faces and screeching as only an excited cat can. The bureau contained $109, which is all the poor man has to build a shelter for his babes. No insurance.

Conundrum.—Said a boy: "That chap yonder is my brother, and this girl is his sister, yet she is no relation of mine." Answer—The boy lied.

The Wants of a City.

The Chicago Tribune, of Sunday April 19, had eighteen columns of displayed advertisements and forty columns of little notices announcing the wants and wishes of 2,511 people. What they wanted to gain or to dispose of, is a curious story which the Tribune thus epitomizes:

Owners advertised 1,000 houses, 300 rooms, 62 stores, 60 offices, lots, etc., to rent, while 65 persons wanted to rent houses, and 29 desired rooms. The articles for sale numbered 29, and 7 persons wished to dispose of building materials. There were 353 real estate "ads," and 21 persons who were anxious to invest in land. Those who have diamonds, jewelry, etc., and want to exchange them for something more bulky, aggregated 95. Boarders at from $3 to $10 a week can find accommodations at 148 houses; and the keepers will probably gather in the 41 who wish to change their place of residence. Persons who desire an agency have 9 chances, and 59 people have either too much money or not enough, and want to lend or borrow some. Seven teachers offer to give lessons in the languages, and 127 opportunities are offered to men to engage in business. The musically inclined can make their selection from 34 "ads," and buy anything from a flute to a "grand." Unemployed males are sought for by 91 persons, and 139 servant girls, etc., are wanted. Situations are looked for by 77 men and 155 women. Horse-fanciers and others who have owned a horse and attachments, and have become tired of them, desire to sell 155 horses, carriages, harness, etc. Twenty-six persons have lost or found something, 16 wish to get rid of machinery, and 13 clairvoyants assert that they can tell all about the past, present and future.

Drink and Disease.—The Revue des Deux Mondes, in speaking of the peculiar liability of the drunkard to attacks of epidemics, remarks: Not only is he subject to ordinary maladies, but these present in him a character of special gravity. M. Bergeron remarks that in cholera epidemics the daily number of victims attains its maximum directly after the grand libations of the week, that is to say, on Tuesdays and Wednesdays. Typhoid fever, dysentery and small-pox are peculiarly severe among those who drink hard. The danger of all acute diseases is greatly augmented with them by the febrile delirium. Finally, the state of drunkenness, and more especially confirmed alcoholism, is very inimical in cases of wounds. The danger of phlegmon, erysipelas, and gangrene are constantly threatening in such cases, the cicatrization of the wound is perpetually delayed, and its surface always presents a bad aspect. There is no such thing as a trifling wound for a drunkard.

Referring the Deity to a Political Document.—During the Mexican war, which the Whigs of that day opposed, a Democratic divine, of the Hard-Shell Baptist persuasion, was once addressing the Throne of Grace in the presence of a hickory-shirted congregation, in a hoop-pole region of Kentucky. After going through a hearty anathema of the Whig organization, he continued: "Oh, Lord, Thou canst not believe one word uttered by these traitors to their country; they are liars and blasphemers, back-biters and slanderers; and it is not true, oh Lord, that we began this war; our enemies, the Mexicans, began it by crossing the Rio Grande into our territory; all of which, oh Lord, Thou wilt find set forth in the late message of our President, James K. Polk, to which I refer Thee. Amen."

No Time for Swearing.—"Catch me using a profane word in the presence of ladies," said a talkative stripling, with a shade of down on his upper lip. "There's a time for all things."

No sir, there isn't a time for all things. No law, human or divine, ever set apart a time for swearing. A profane expression is a sin and an abomination, utter it when and where you will. As for ladies, yes, I'll grant you it is well to be and act our best in their presence. We cannot be too true, too pure, too honorable, if we want to stand upright before a good woman or a good girl—yes, while I'm about it, I'll add, or before a little mite of a girl-baby, with her soul fresh from heaven.

I only know of one other before whom we ought to be just as particular, if not more so. When He is not around, my boys, you can safely do just about as you please. But when you're in His presence—and, to my thinking, we're all there, or thereabouts, pretty much all the time—have a care! Don't offend the deepest love, the whitest purity, the grandest honor of all.

Pulsations per Minute.—Vatel's "Veterinary Pathology" gives the following as the number of pulsations in a minute, in a state of health, in the under-mentioned animals:

Horse	32 to 39	Dog	90 to 100
Ox or Cow	33 to 42	Crow	136
Sheep	70 to 76	Duck	136
Goat	72 to 76	Hen	140
Cat	110 to 120	Heron	200
Hare	120

VINEGAR BITTERS
PURELY VEGETABLE
FREE FROM ALCOHOL
DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
EUREKA
VINEGAR BITTERS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

CENTRAL COMMITTEE MEETING.

The Democratic Central Committee of this county, will meet at the Court House,

SATURDAY MAY 30th 1874.

at 3 o'clock P. M. to transact important business. Every member it is hoped will endeavor to be present.— Also all others interested are cordially invited to attend. The following is a list of the members

H. H. Houser,	Geo. Barney
John Shoub.	A. J. Little,
Jas. Goetschius	J M Brumback
M. Waterman,	Cyrus Walters,
Geo. Headley,	Saml. Stoy,
John Butt,	J. M. Urie,
S. B. Mottinger,	John Stearns.

Mr. Metcalf having removed from the county Mr. Brumback is appointed from his township.

T. C. MAYS, Chairman,

* * *

Whenever Robert Bonner finds himself sliding back in the affections of the American people he employs some man to come along and offer him $100,000 for Dexter.

* * *

Gov. Allen's administration is proving the most popular that Ohio has had for many years. If an election were to take place now his majority would be overwhelming. The people really like his old-fashioned Democratic notions.

* * *

That is a significant statement of the New York Herald to the effect that the Comptroller's office of New York City, under the reform management, cost last year seventy-five thousand dollars more than in '68 under the Tammany ring! This is something to make Tweed smile.

* * *

Our Indian war during the last four year have cost the nation 500,000,000 —so Mr. Longbridge reported in explaining the provisions of the Indian Appropriation bill recently in the House. This Indian business seems to be worse than the liquor traffic; worse than the District troubles; worse than Credit Mobilier. It seems folly to disburse any more millions on a lot of painted savages would be perfectly harmless if there did not exist a hungry lot of contractors to get up imaginary Indian raids and murders from time to time. This useless waste of treasure should be stopped. It is is like chasing globules of quicksilver in a glass dish.

* * *

A majority of the Senate of the United States, 34 against 30, are in favor of passing the Currency bill over the veto. This vote, being less than the requisite two-thirds, fails to override the veto, as was certain beforehand. But it is a significant vote. The Senate is the dignified, deliberate legislative body of the nation. Its members being elected for six years, are not swayed by the popular clamor They vote according to the dictates of enlightened, deliberate judgment. A majority of this body, after a Presidential veto, which of course was without warrant or precedent, record themselves in favor of more money. The popular branch of Congress is, by a much larger majority, opposed to the veto.

* * *

When Congress does get to work on a really important measure of the public welfare and the disbursement of the current paper of the country, it can accomplish something. There was the passage in the house the other day of a bill appropriating $100,000 to build a military telegraph along the northern frontier of Texas, as a means of checking Indian raids. Indians are so supremely unsophisticated that they would not, of course, dream of pulling down a telegraph wire, though some of them might be so reckless as to send a message to the nearest officer announcing that they were flourishing their tomahawks, were arrayed in war paint and wanted to be checked. The bill was passed with just five minutes debate, one unpatriotic member suggesting that the job might be done by the soldiers at a cost of only $50,000. The Texas delegation had talked up the measure, thus securing a rapid vote,— a wonderfully rapid vote. Thus is checked a raid of Indians on Texas. Who, however, will check the raid of congressional Modocs on the Treasury?

THE VETO.

During the last Presidential campaign it was clearly shown in the many acts Grant had been guilty of that his sympathies were not with the mass of the people, but that he favored the money sharks and bondholders, rather than the ordinary tax payers. Since he vetoed the currency bill, however, a number of papers, which were intensely radical, in favoring his election have come to the conclusion that this peculiar sympathy of his for the rich is an actual fact. The Indianapolis Journal the great Morton paper says that the strictures upon the President's action are confined so exclusively to the fact that his veto indicates an utter absence of sympathy with the growing sections of the country, and a devotion to the moneyed and banking interests of the East at the expense of the active laboring millions.

The Warsaw Indianian a pure partisan paper of Radical complexion, endorses the above but couldn't see in the campaign. Grant was a great man then, but now his sympathies are not with the laboring millions, We presume this has been brought about since his election. The fact is the Radical party sees now that it has made an ass of itself, and hopes to get out of it in this way. How mournful that this was not discovered when they were fighting the war over again, two years ago.

No sympathy for the laboring millions is now their confession. The house of the Radicals has fallen, and in its fall they have been forced to confess what they could no longer conceal that the laboring millions have been blinded and hoodwinked long enough.

* * *

In view of the fact that every Democrat in the House, except five opposed the McCrary railroad bill on the ground of State Rights, it would be interesting to know which is the most important, popular rights or State rights?

The above paragraph is going the rounds, at present, of the Radical newspapers, and is designed to prejudice Granges against the Democratic party. The bill, if passed, would have placed the control of every plank road, turn-pike or gravel road in the hands of Congress. It would have removed from the people the control of those roads which pass before their doors, through their lands, and upon which they travel almost daily. We would like to know whether the people of the locality in which such roads are located are not better qualified to take charge of and manage them than the Congress of the United States, not one member of which may even have heard of it. We observe that the Warsaw Indianian is trying to make a point against the Columbia City Post, in regard to the McCrary bill." The Indianian will find upon looking over the names of those who voted against the sweeping measure the name of the Hon. Henry B. Sayler, the member from this District, a gentlemen whom it supported in 1872. —Hunting Eemocrat.

* * *

Grant's veto of the currency bill is a step in the right direction towards oppression and tyrranny. It is putting a power into the hands of the money sharks with which to bind burdens upon the backs of the working class of the country. —Enquirer.

Pioneer Sketches

—OF—

DeKALB COUNTY

NUMBER TEN.

He then, by means of a pole placed from the stump to the ice, got Mrs. R. on the ice, and, from the ice on the other side on her saddle again, wading out as he had waded in.

The next summer, Mr. Robinson and his brother went down the St. Joseph to Fort Wayne, and then down the Maumee, to near where Defiance now is, for seed wheat and corn to be ground. They performed the voyage in a considerable sized perogue. Loading it with sixty bushels of grain, they started back—Had some difficulty in getting along, being both raw hands at "Peroguing," but succeed tolerably well until they reached bull rapids, near the State line, about eighteen miles below Fort Wayne. Here the wind ruffling the surface, they could not see bottom, and ran on rocks and stuck fast. Getting out into the water, they shoved the perogue over the rocks, and up the rapids; wading sometimes in water to the waist. Getting aboard, they got along tolerably, till they reached "Cole's dam," one mile below Fort Wayne. Here they had to unload, and carry the grain on their shoulders, up a steep bank about thirty feet high,—go more than a half a mile after a rope, and, tying this to the bow of the boat, pull it over the dam,—coming very near sinking it in the operation. They then reloaded, and were overtaken by darkness at the mouth of the St. Jo. From this to John's mill they had much difficulty in getting along in the darkness and shallow water. Getting to the mill they unloaded that part of the grain they intended to be ground, and took their lodgings for the night, on the bare ground, and no covering but the blue sky. In fact during the entire route, they had the same bed and covering every night. From John's mill the rest of the way home, they got out nearly every ripple, and pushed the boat up; and sometimes it was necessary to unload an reload, laying the bags on the large rocks in the ripples, until they got the boat over. Soon after his return, Mr. C. Robinson was prostrated with a severe attack of the pleurisy, brought on by exposure.

We spoke, just now, of "Doctor bills" as compared with "mosqueto bills." That you may have some idea of the force of the comparison, we will give one instance of the sickness of the early settlement.

Mr. Isaac Meeks, now of Union mills —Lagrange county, is my informant. "I came into the Coburn settlement Concord Township," says he, "soon after Mr. Asher Coburn, (who was the first settler,) and built a cabin fourteen feet square and moved therein. Some time after this Mr. Coburn and John H. Coburn, the one my father-in-law, moved into the settlement, and I offered them both the hospitalities of my cabin. We were now fourteen in number in a cabin fourteen feet square, and one story high. In a little while every one of us took down sick, and we had to swing up beds to the sides of the cabin, one above the other, to accommodate all the sick. I was sick for four or five weeks, and the rest mostly as many months!"

We spoke in our last chapter, of the difficulties and hardships of the settlers, in getting to mill and market. We will now give another instance, exceeding in painful interest any yet mentioned. The sufferer was a resident of Hicksville, just over the State line, in Ohio; but the scene of his suffering was in this county; hence we will relate the circumstances, so far as memory does not prove treacherous.

It was in the winter of 1837-8 that Mr. Osburn started from where Hicksville had just been laid out, with an ox team to go to mill at Fort Wayne. Returning on the east side of the St. Jo. river he was overtaken by night above where Leo now is. Having had to wade into the creeks and break ice before his oxen, his clothes were wet, and it was freezing severely. Onward, however, he made his way, through the snow and darkness, on a stormy winter night, until he began to feel that he was freezing. Leaving his slow team in the road, he then started hoping to reach Mr. Brant's (across the river from where Spencerville now is,) but soon found his legs becoming so stiff that he could no longer walk. Knowing that his life was at stake, he then crawled on his hands and knees about a mile, until he found that he was too far gone to proceed in this way. He now commenced crying for help, and Mr. Brants' dog, hearing his voice, commenced barking, and some of the family going out to see what was the matter, were led by the dog too the poor sufferer, about a mile off and he was born into the house. Both his legs, however, had to be amputated just below the knees. He remained several days at Mr. Brants, and was drawn home on his sled.

As mills were so scarce and distant, the pioneers had to tax their inventive powers to provide a substitute

Millet and Hungarian Grass.

DeGroff, Nelson & Co., of Fort Wayne, are receiving direct from the farmers of Sidney, Illinois, where these popular grasses are so extensively and profitably grown, a supply of fresh seeds, the growth of 1873. It is well known that old seeds germinate poorly if at all, hence the importance of new seed. They also deal in Osage Orange, Alsike and White clover Lawn Grass, Blue Grass, Red top and all other field and garden seed. Price list sent on application.

All business letters intended for this office should be addressed "Courier office" so that in our absence they will receive prompt attention. We expect to start next week for a few days absence in the east.

What does the Press think now of that little Republican majority, that it thought we were so worried about. Things have changed and the question will now be what to do to get rid of that little Democratic majority.

The Fort Wayne Sentinel says General Anthony Wayne, the well known trotter, will appear at a number of the principal meetings during the coming season. He is now at the race-track, where he is being driven every day.

Hank Altenburg being inspector of the election, forgot to vote until after the box was opened to count-out, and knowing the law he was prevented from enjoying this privilege. He has been asked several times since how he voted.

Col. S. Lauferty and Corporal T. D. Gross paid us a friendly visit last week, and we were glad to see them looking so well, considering the great amount of labor they have generally performed during the last winter

The pictures in the Postoffice are the work of our excellent artists Gordon & Roth, and are equal to anything to be found in Fort Wayne. When they get in their new building look out for splendid work.

The Circuit Rider is the name of a new book, by B. Eggleston, who gives a humorous account of how our Methodist friends run things in the days of Peter Cartwright. It is written in the style of a story and is very interesting. Get a copy at Davenport's.

Capt. Boughan was not a nominee on either of the tickets, but several of his friends on both sides pulled for him, and he came out three ahead for Assessor.—But then he needs the proceeds of the office, you know, which is something less than $5,000 a year.

We repeat for the benefit of the two Grant organs north of us that while the State levy is only 15 cents on the one hundred dollars, yet it amounts to an increase of 20 cents, considering the fact that the valuation of property, since the increase, has been nearly doubled. A farm valued at $1000 before a Republican Legislature increased the State tax is now valued at nearly double that and consequently the State tax at 15 cents would be nearly twice as much now, as it was when under the Democratic rule. Our readers can readily ascertain this by a few figures, and they will soon see that we state the facts. Our obtuse neighbors being for Grant, are blind to anything like a fair statement.

SHALL WE HAVE THEM.—The Eel River Company have made a proposition to locate their shops at this place, providing the necessary inducements are offered. These would add more to the material wealth of our town than all the railroads put together. It is now for our citizens to say whether an effort shall be made to secure them. If we can be liberal in our own interests we can have them. This is a matter that it won't do to stand out about. Everyone will have to come forward and do their utmost.

A meeting will be held at the Court House this evening to see what can be done. Every man who has his own interests and that of the town at heart will be there.

An Entire Democratic Ticket Elected in Auburn!

The Colored Troops Fought Nobly

Average Majority 34!

"There is Beauty Everywhere"

SHAKE!

Two unexceptionably good tickets were put in the field, last Monday, in this place for the suffrages of the people, and the most sanguine on either side expected the election of a part of both. The Democrats nominated on Friday evening and selected the best material to be had, and our Republican friends reluctantly admitted the next day that we had a good ticket but they would nominate a better one. On Saturday evening they made their selection which also included their best men and thus the two parties, without any particular advantage on either side, went to battle each expecting to be victorious. There was no particular effort to get out a full vote, yet three hundred were polled, notwithstanding some fifty more were counted after the polls closed, who had not voted. At noon it began to be apparent that the Democrats were pulling ahead, and they kept it up until the close. When the counting out commenced, it was still thought by many that a mixed ticket would be the result. No one expected the election of every man on the Democratic ticket except Assessor.—We give the majority of each officer elected:

Jacob Walborn, Trustee	1st ward	12
P. D. Ryan "	2nd "	30
T. D. Gross "	3rd "	33
K. E. Williams "	4th "	30
D. Z. Hoffman "	5th "	40
F. E. Davenport, Clerk		26
J. R. Launing, Treasurer		54
W. M. Boughan, Assessor		3

All concede the ticket to be a good one and now we want to see a faithful and economical administration of our town affairs.

The out-going Board have done good work, and have generally had the interests of the town in view. Our expenses were pretty heavy last year, and some very good improvements were made. Marshal Altenburg gave very general satisfaction, and made a good officer and we want to see a successor appointed that will do equally as good. We shall now be at liberty to criticise more liberally as it will not be ascribed to political motive, and if these new officers don't do just about right, they need not expect us to be very complimentary in what we have to say. We want to see them show back bone enough to carry through any measure that will be to our general interest.

Since then I don't deny
 But there's been a word or two,
But we've got our eyes wide open
 And know just what to do.
When one speaks cross the other
 Just meets it with a laugh,
And the first one's ready to Give up more than half.

The above is from "Betsy and I made up," to be recited by the author, next Wednesday evening at the M. E. Church together with other recitations. Admission 35 cents.

No person can use Boschee's German Syrup without getting immediate relief and cure. We have the first case of Colds Coughs, or Consumption, or any disease of the throat and lungs, yet to hear that has not been cured. We have distributed every year for three years over 250,000 sample bottles "Free of Charge" by druggists in all parts of the United States. No other manufacturer of medicine ever gave their preparations such a test as this.—Go to your Druggist and get a bottle for 75 cents and try it—two doses will relieve you.

For the Courier.
FRANKLIN, May 5, 1874.

Mr. Editor—From the very kind and truthful manner in which the learned and ass-tute editors of the Waterloo Press have referred to me on several occasions for the last few months, I conclude they intended to give me a hoist in their intelligent, and to them, no doubt, satisfactory expose of the "bond case" in the last issue of that very truthful (?) sheet; but as is usual with them they have jumped at conclusions, and as is also usual with them, they are wrong as to the authorship of the article on the "bond case" in your paper of the previous week.

Is it not a pity, Mr. Editor, that persons having so little regard for truth, justice, and fair dealing, should become connected with the public press? I do not know but the Press is conducted as fairly as any other paper—I should be sorry to believe it, however; but as I have had a more intimate knowledge of the course of that thing, I place no confidence in any assertion it makes, as I think it is entitled to none, and I only tolerate it on account of legal notices, and, in fact, were it not for the sordidness of the conductor of that sheet I should doubt the genuineness of them.

The editors of the Press seem to feel sore over some disparaging reference to them in your "bond case" article, but I see nothing in that to equal an epithet applied to them by one of those "muebly's" interested in this same "bond case."

MILES WATERMAN.

P. S.—Editors Press will please adjust petard to hoist some one else, M. W.

WILL M. CARLTON.

The famous Michigan poet, author of "Betsey and I are out," "Over the Hill to the Poor-house," and other poems which have attained such sudden and widespread popularity, is to favor the people of Auburn with select readings from his poems on Wednesday eve., May 13 under the auspices of the Presbyterian church. I speak from personal acquaintance with Mr. Carlton and also from a familiarity with his writings, when I say that his pretentions are as modest as his qualities are shining—that as a poet he is the best living interpreter of the manners, customs, dialect and genius of the western people. In his poems he has given us a Homeric picture of the simplicity and marvelous purity of our early American farm-life. His "Farm Ballads" contain vivid portraitures of those domestic and rural scenes that contain many elements of real romance, and which when invested with the graces of culture and poetic diction are so fascinating. Mr. Carlton has faithfully delineated in an unique and glowing style the more marked features of American life—the mingled wit and pathos, the flashes of grotesque humor against the sober background of the spirit of patient fortitude and self sacrifice which characterize what is termed our heroic age. He has idealized the more salient traits of the Western character and his contributions to poetic fiction will, in time to come, be regarded in many respects as occupying the same place in original American literature that Homer does in the Greek and Chaucer in the English, containing, as they do, a historic picture of the manners, traits, virtues and weakness of the early American character.

He possesses unusual powers as a reader. His vivid appreciation of the qualities which form the ground-work of his poetry, his voice and manner invest his readings with a lively interest. We may be sure of a rich entertainment. Our friends of the Presbyterian church are making a noble effort to rise clear of debt and also hope, in the near future, to construct a church edifice that will reflect credit upon our town. The entertainment is for their benefit and for that object.

There is another fact touching upon the pride of our citizens: A town the size of Auburn usually maintain, during the winter season, a course of lectures.—We have not done so heretofore, but we may yet, if the people display sufficient interest in such matters, to give a warm and hearty support to this, the first experiment. Thomas Carlyle says that America is made up of forty millions of people, mostly fools. I suppose that is the reason why so many of them prefer a mirstrel show to a literary entertainment.—It can be explained in no other way. But it cannot be that the people of our enterprising, growing and wide-awake town will fall under the larger half of Carlyle's classification. Let us all turn out.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

TWO MEN were killed outright, two fatally injured, and four seriously hurt, by the fall of a building in Brooklyn, the other day.

THE New York Cremation Society had another meeting a few evenings ago, about fifty persons, including one woman, being present. The Committee on Organization reported, recommending the incorporation of a stock company as the most feasible means of obtaining the desired end....The Stevens House, a new nine-story hotel in New York, has been suddenly deserted on account of the bulging of the walls. Huge timbers are now braced against the building to keep it from tumbling down.

A DISPATCH from Pittsburgh says that "another great industrial strike is going on in the oil regions, caused by the very low price of petroleum. Most of the oil producers of the region have combined for the purpose of suspending operations until a scarcity of the article enhances its price."

THE residence of Henry Pennington, of Clearfield county, Pa., was lately destroyed by fire. Two sons and a daughter of Mr. P. perished in the flames....Five men were killed at Cresson, Pa., the other day, being run over by an express train....The New York Legislature have agreed to appropriate $300,000 to continue the enlargement of the Erie canal, and $500,000 for the Champlain canal.

The West.

THE following is an abstract of the summaries and estimates of the National Crop Reporter of the 27th of April: The area planted in Irish potatoes last year in the State of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Ohio, and Wisconsin was, in round numbers, 554,009 acres, the average percentage of increase upon which is estimated at nearly 5 per cent., or about 28,000 acres. Correspondents in Minnesota, Iowa, and Wisconsin estimate the probable increase in the area of barley to be 2 6-10 per cent as compared with last year. The average condition of swine April 1, in the eight States named above, shows a very low rate as compared with the condition at the same date last year, representing the latter at 100, the average for the eight stand a fraction less than 81. None of the States report over 90, and Missouri returns 67. The average prices of leading articles are as follows: Wheat, $1.17; corn, 55c; oats, 42c; hay, $9.27; swine, $4.66; potatoes, $1.15.

A CENSUS of St. Louis taken by the School Board shows the total number between the ages of 5 and 21 in that city to be 138,131, giving a population of about 435,000....The Globe Theater, in Chicago, was recently destroyed by fire.

A VERY important decision has been rendered by Judge Blodgett, of the United States Circuit Court, at Chicago, involving the right of wives and daughters of bankrupts to hold property against the claims of creditors. The assignee of a bankrupt had seized all the assets he could find, among which were several articles claimed by the bankrupt's wife and daughter as having been earned by them as agents or clerks of the bankrupt. The Court decided that the claim of the petitioners was legal, and ordered the assignee to restore the property to their possession....The whisky traffic has been banished from Dwight, Ill....Six students of Ann Arbor (Mich.) University have been suspended for "hazing."....The old man and woman arrested some time ago in the mountains of Utah on suspicion of being Bender, the Kansas miscreant, and his partner in sin, have arrived at Topeka, Kan., and been fully identified as the Cherry Vale butchers. The son and daughter are still at large.

CAPT. BEAUMONT, an official of the Canadian Government, is now in the Illinois Penitentiary, doing duty as a common guard. He is there as a representative of his Government to obtain a thorough practical knowledge of the management of the institution, which has been selected by the Canadian Commissioners as the model penal institution of the United States....Mrs. Nancy Clem, of Indianapolis, who has been four times tried and convicted of complicity in the murder of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Young, has at last been set at liberty. The authorities refused to appropriate money for another prosecution, whereupon the Prosecuting Attorney entered a nolle prosequi—and the accused was discharged.

STEPHEN HOOD, a negro murderer, was hanged at Cleveland on the 29th ult. The crime was one of unusual atrocity. He enticed his stepson, a boy of twelve years, away from home, made him drunk with whisky, killed him with a board, and buried him under a pile of rotting wood....Albert Keep and Alexander Mitchell, Presidents respectively of the Chicago and Northwestern and Milwaukee and St. Paul railways, have addressed letters to the Governor of Wisconsin, giving in detail the reasons why their respective roads cannot conform to the new tariff of rates fixed by the recent session of the Wisconsin Legislature. Both gentlemen claim that if the rates fixed by law are enforced the roads cannot pay expenses, while the receipts would fall far below the amount required for the payment of running expenses, the interest on the bonded indebtedness of the roads, and dividends to stockholders. Such being the case, they will decline to adopt the tariff fixed, and will contest the constitutionality of the law in the courts.

The South.

OF the 106 estimates of the cotton crop of 1873, opened at the Memphis Cotton Exchange, the highest was 4,287,613; lowest, 3,891,036; average, 4,132,192.

Washington.

A WASHINGTON telegram announces that at a caucus composed of the leading Republican Senators who voted for the vetoed Currency bill, held at the house of Senator Morton, "it was decided to draw up an address to the country, and Senators Morton, Carpenter, Logan, Ferry, of Michigan, and West, were appointed to draft it. The instructions to the committee are to contrast the message of Dec. 1 with the veto message with reference to the finance recommendations, and to attempt to show the alleged inconsistency of the two positions of the President. The committee are to endeavor to show that the December message recommends inflation, at least $156,000,000."

SENATOR EDMUNDS has prepared a bill empowering the President to appoint a commission consisting of an army officer of rank not lower than Lieutenant-Colonel, a Commander of the Navy, and a citizen expert not connected in any way with any telegraph company, who shall examine into the postal telegraph project, and report to Congress as to the advisability of its adoption in the United States.

A WASHINGTON telegram gives the following as the general outline of a financial compromise that will probably be agreed upon by the expansionists and hard-money men of Congress: 1. Fixing the legal-tender limit at $382,000,000,000, the total now issued. 2. Free banking, with provisions for redemption, and the abolition of the reserves held for circulation. 3. The retirement of the legal-tenders at the rate of 33⅓ per cent., as fast as new bank notes are issued, until the volume of legal-tenders is reduced to $300,000,000. 4. The issue at some future date, probably in 1877, of a 4½ per cent. 30-year gold bond, exchangeable for legal-tenders, the greenbacks received to be used in the purchase of 6 per cent. bonds.

THE House Committee on Appropriations has completed the Pension bill, appropriating $29,000,000....Attorneys for Brooks and Baxter have arrived at Washington, where they propose to argue the question of the right of their respective clients to the Governorship of Arkansas before Attorney-General Williams.

THE River and Harbor bill has been completed and reported to the House by the Committee on Commerce. Among the largest items of appropriations in the bill are the following: Harbor of refuge, Chicago, $75,000; harbor of refuge, Calumet, Ill., $25,000; Michigan City, $50,000; Grand Haven, $50,000; St. Mary's Falls canal, $200,000; harbor of refuge, Lake Huron, $75,000; Toledo, $75,000; Cleveland, $30,000; Buffalo breakwater, $75,000; harbor of refuge, Oswego, $75,000; Falls of St. Anthony, $50,000; Upper Mississippi, $25,000; Des Moines rapids canal, $400,000; Rock Island rapids, $50,000; improvement of the Mississippi, Missouri and Arkansas rivers, $100,000; removing Red river raft, $50,000; improving the mouth of the Mississippi river, $130,000; Mobile harbor, $75,000; White river, above Jacksonport, $50,000; Osage river, $25,000; Mississippi between the mouths of the Ohio and Missouri, $200,000; Ohio river, $150,000; Improvement of the Great Kanawha, $150,000; Upper Monongahela, $25,000; Tennessee river, above Chattanooga, $25,000, and below Chattanooga, including Muscle shoals, $200,000; Fox and Wisconsin rivers, $300,000; Duluth harbor, $10,000. The total appropriations amount to four and a half millions, being a million less than reported to the House last year.

Political.

A CALL has been issued by the Anti-Monopolists of Iowa for a State Convention at Des Moines on the 24th of June next.

General.

THE completion of the great bridge at St. Louis is promised by the 20th of May.

INQUIRY at the offices of the different steamship lines, says a New York telegram, shows that the aggregate number of travelers to Europe this season will probably be much less than in 1873. This reduction is generally attributed to the effects of the late panic and unsettled state of the currency....The Federal Council of Internationals have resolved to dissolve, the organization having proved a complete failure in the United States.

THE Odd-Fellows throughout the country very generally observed April 27 as a holiday in commemoration of the 55th anniversary of the introduction of the order in the United States.

THE report that Senator Schurz will take editorial charge of a German newspaper in New York after the expiration of his term is denied.

CUMULATIVE evidence of the reckless haste in which the officers and crew of the French steamer L'Amerique saved their precious lives at the expense of the property confided to them, is furnished by the recovery at sea of the vessel's mails, which were found drifting in an open boat.

Foreign.

THE worst of the famine in India is now over. A report has been presented in the British House of Lords to the effect that the crops for the coming season promise to be abundant, and the present provisions against famine are ample....The British House of Commons was the other day the scene of a personal colloquy worthy of our own Congress. Mr. Smollet made a fierce attack on Mr. Gladstone, and moved that the suddenness of the dissolution of Parliament was deserving of the censure of the House. In the course of his remarks he denounced the ex-Premier as a trickster. The latter challenged Smollet to repeat the epithet applied to him, and on that gentleman's refusal to do so, denounced him as lacking in decency and manliness. The commons, without a division, defeated the motion of Mr. Smollet.

THE London papers freely comment upon President Grant's veto of the currency bill. The Times says: "To British eyes the apparently interminable inflation of currency is a hazardous proceeding fraught with peril to the prosperity and even to the unity of the American Commonwealth; but it is not denied that no other country in the world could do what America has hitherto done with its finances. It is a law of the American nature to expand and develop in every possible direction"....Senor Castelar has written a letter in which he declares himself in favor of a Federal Republic for Spain.

THE temperance crusade has reached England, making a first appearance at Manchester. ...There have been serious disorders in Poland, growing out of the attempts to force the inhabitants to attach themselves to the Russian national church. The priests of twenty-six parishes in the Government of Siedlee were all thrown into prison for refusing to obey the general orders of the Russo-Greek Church. In many places the peasantry stoned the priests, which led to collisions with the military, in which large numbers of peasants were shot down, and many soldiers killed and wounded. The prisons at Siedlee and other chief towns are crowded with prisoners. Besides the arrests which were made, the inhabitants of the troubled districts were sentenced to be beaten—the men with fifty blows and the women with twenty-five, while children received ten blows each, without distinction of age or sex. Some of the women, who were violent in their language, received as many as 150 blows....A London telegram says there is a serious misunderstanding regarding the rank and precedence of the Duchess of Edinburgh.

THE financial policy of the German Government does not appear to be a very great failure, as the Finance Minister reports a surplus on hand for 1873 of 21,000,000 thalers.... A dispatch from the seat of war in Acheen says: "In the battle of the 11th, 8,000 natives made a general attack on the Dutch positions. They attempted to carry the works at Kraton by assault, and were driven back with great slaughter."

THE farmers recently held a meeting at Newmarket, England, to consider the present difficulties with the laborers. Among the speeches delivered, says the account, "was one by Mr Wood, a native of England, but now of Ohio, who offered to bring from that State any number of persons who were willing to work for 14 shillings a week."....The Franco-American Postal Convention has been signed by the French Government.

THE TRANSPORTATION PROBLEM.

Report of the Chairman of the Senate Transportation Committee—It Recommends the Construction of Four Great Water Routes—The Cost Estimated at $120,000,000 to $155,000,000.

Mr. Windom, of Minnesota, has submitted to the United States Senate the report of the Special Committee on Transportation, of which he is Chairman. The committee, it will be remembered, spent nearly the whole of the vacation traveling over the country gathering information and obtaining the judgment of persons interested as to the relief measures required. Senator Windom, in his report says the committee have come to the conclusion that no substantial reduction in the cost of transportation is to be anticipated from unregulated competition between the existing railways, nor is competition to be induced by authorizing the construction of additional lines, if they are to be under private management and control. As to the power of Congress, under the Constitution, to regulate inter-State commerce, the committee find that Congress, in its discretion and under its responsibility to the people, may first prescribe rules by which instruments, vehicles and agents engaged in transporting commodities from one State into and through another, shall be governed, whether such transportation is by land or water.

Second—That it may appropriate money for the construction of railways or canals where the same shall be necessary for the regulation of commerce.

Third—That it may incorporate a company with authority to construct them.

Fourth—That it may exercise the right of eminent domain within a State in order to provide for the construction of said railways or canals, etc.

Fifth—It may, in its exercise of the right of eminent domain, take for public use, paying just compensation therefor, any existing railway or canal owned by private persons or corporations. These propositions are discussed at considerable length in the report of the committee, and the decisions of the courts from which they were deducted are there cited. After a most careful consideration of the merits of the various proposed improvements, taking into account the cost, practicability and probable advantages of each, the committee have come to the unanimous conclusion that the following are the most feasible and advantageous channels of commerce to be created or improved by the National Government, and Congress shall act upon this subject, namely:

First—The Mississippi river;

Second—A continuous water-line of adequate capacity from the Mississippi river to the city of New York, via the northern lakes.

Third—A route adequate to the wants of commerce, through the central line of States, from the Mississippi river, via the Ohio and Kanawha rivers, to a point in West Virginia, thence by canal and slack-water or by a freight-railway to tide water.

Fourth—A route from the Mississippi river, via the Ohio and Tennessee rivers, to a point in Alabama or Tennessee, and thence by canal and slack water, or by a freight-railway to the ocean.

The Committee estimate the cost of the improvement to the Mississippi river at $16,000,000; of the Northern route, including the Fox and Wisconsin River canal, and Hennepin canal, and enlargement of the New York canals, the cost is estimated at $19,000,000; of the central route, including the radical improvement of the Ohio river to give six or seven feet of navigation at low water, and of the Kanawha river to give six feet of water, $25,000,000, and the connection by canal or freight-railway to tide-water in Virginia; a canal to cost $55,000,000, or railroad $25,000,000.

Of the Southern route the improvement of the Tennessee river, to give three feet of navigation, and the construction of a canal or freight railway to the Atlantic ocean at a cost respectively of $35,000,000 or $30,000,000. If canals be constructed the total cost will be about $155,000,000. If the railways be chosen, the total cost will be about $120,000,000. An actual expenditure of from $20,000,000 to $25,000,000 per annum will be required for six years, when the whole can be completed. The resulting benefits will for all time annually repay more than the entire cost. But I am asked how the money is to be raised for these improvements. I reply, by a system of rigid economy in all expenditures not absolutely necessary, by which nearly enough can be saved for this purpose.

Second—By the issue of public improvement bonds, or, third, by taxation if the latter policy be adopted; I suggest that a restoration of the tax on tea and coffee will produce about $20,000,000 per annum, which will be sufficient to complete the entire work in six years. The repeal of that tax has caused but little, if any, reduction in the cost of this article, and its restoration would not materially increase it. At the end of six years the tax could be repealed, and these great public works would stand forever as monuments to the wisdom of the present Congress. I do not believe, however, that it would be necessary either to issue bonds or to levy additional taxes.

The inauguration of the system of internal improvements indicated would so stimulate the business energies of the country that we would find it easier to raise the additional revenue required than it now is to meet existing obligations.

The Southern Floods.

Accounts from Louisiana, Arkansas and other Southern States continue to give particulars of the the widespread devastation caused by the floods in the valley of the Mississippi. A telegram from Monroe, La., dated April 27, says: "It is impossible to give an idea of the extent of the overflow here. The water is higher than was ever known. The town is an island two and a half miles long by half a mile wide, from which there is no exit except by boats, or by swimming. People living in the rear have been driven in. All the vacant houses are taken, and several families are living in the Court-House. Business is almost completely suspended, but the houses are open. Fully 1,000 people in the town have not rations for three days, nor money to buy one. Stock of every kind is gathered in the town and starving. Trenton is under water from Crossley's residence up beyond the business houses of the town, from six inches at the foot of the principal street on the river bank, to eight feet in the rear. There are no crops to speak of, and there have not been five days' work done along the river in four weeks. What the people are to do, God only knows."

Capt. Blanks, an old Ouachita river steamboatman, in a letter to the New Orleans Relief Committee estimates the number of people in actual want on the Ouachita alone at 11,600. This number have been under water over three weeks. They lost all their hogs, and nearly all their cattle are either lost or starving. The people themselves have neither money nor credit, no place to go to, and nothing to do. But this estimate by no means discloses the distress of those residing on small bayous and creeks, which have been overflowed by the backwater and floods of rain. Those, too, must suffer or receive assistance. If these be added, the number needing help is not short of 25,000 people in the district referred to.

The New Orleans Times says the extent of the damage which has resulted from the great overflow is just beginning to be fully understood; that it was vast was readily conceived, but that it should involve 5,000,000 of acres and a population of 178,000 was apparently beyond reasonable calculation; yet such is really the case in the cotton regions. It is now ascertained that nine of the largest and richest parishes producing cotton have been inundated, embracing fully 2,500,000 acres. The amount of cotton land in these parishes in actual cultivation is ascertained to be 250,000 acres, besides 100,000 acres in corn. These estimates include only the large places, leaving out hundreds of small farms, and all estimates for cattle, hogs, and gardens. The population of these nine parishes is 20,391 whites, and 54,033 negroes, according to the census of 1870.

In the sugar-producing parishes, ascertained facts discover an equal, if not a greater, amount of ruin and suffering. The overflow in the sugar district covers nearly 2,500,000 acres, tilled and untilled, including a production of 30,000 hogsheads of sugar, besides a large product of rice and the crops of small farmers, of whom there are many hundreds, who have lost their stock and pretty much everything else they possessed. The population of these parishes, according to the census of 1870, was 50,368 whites and 72,241 blacks, making a total of 122,609. In the sugar-producing district, embracing about twelve parishes, it is believed that more than 25,000 people are now in actual suffering for the necessary supplies of life, and that in less than 60 days the number of those whose circumstances will require alleviation will be increased to more than 50,000 persons.

The Arkansas Rebellion.

LITTLE ROCK, April 28.—A company of Baxter men took possession of the Fort Smith train to-day, near Lewisburg, to prevent some reinforcements for Brooks from reaching the city. Capt. William F. Graves, of the Brooks forces, left the State House this evening, and came into the Baxter lines, stating that he had quit that party.

The Baxterites are jubilant. They claim that the Government has decided in their favor.

LITTLE ROCK, April 29.—Business is almost flat. Notwithstanding the quietude of affairs a collision may occur any time. United States troops occupy their old position at the City Hall and at the United States Court room. Baxter received to-day one piece of artillery from below, with 200 men from Hempstead county.

WASHINGTON, April 29.—The attorneys representing both parties in the Arkansas dispute for the Governorship have called on the Attorney-General, and will submit written arguments in support of their respective claims. The decision of the President will be made after a thorough consideration of the arguments thus presented. Attorney-General Williams will prepare an opinion for the Executive.

Punctuation.

The following paragraph illustrates the importance of punctuation. It can be read in two ways, making a very bad man, or a very good man, according to the printing:

He is an old and experienced man in vice and wickedness he is never found opposing the walks of iniquity he takes delight in the downfall of his neighbors he never rejoices in the prosperity of any of his fellow creatures he is always ready to assist in destroying the peace of society he takes no pleasure in serving the Lord he is uncommonly diligent in sowing disorder among his friends and acquaintance he takes no pride in laboring to promote the cause of Christianity he has not been negligent in endeavoring to stigmatize all public teachers to make no exertions to subdue his evil passions he strives hard to build up Satan's kingdom he lends no aid to the support of the gospel among the heathen he contributes largely to the evil adversary he pays no attention to good advice he gives great heed to the devil he will never go to heaven he must go where he will receive the just recompense of reward.

THE BUSY BEE.—It is estimated that there are two million bee-hives in the United States. Every hive yields, on an average, a little over twenty-two pounds of honey. The average price at which honey is sold is twenty-five cents a pound; so that after paying their own board the bees present us with a revenue of over eight millions eight hundred thousand dollars. To reckon it another way, they make a clear gift of over a pound of pure honey to every man, woman and child in the vast domain of the United States. Over twenty-three and one-third million pounds of wax are made and given to us by these industrious workers. The keeping of bees is one of the most profitable investments that our people can make of their money. The profits arising from the sale of surplus honey average from fifty to two hundred per cent. on the capital invested.

THE railways of Massachusetts carried 28,126,381 passengers over their roads in 1869, 24,721,532 in 1870, 32,816,818 in 1871, 36,059,663 in 1872 and 42,398,001 in 1873. The number carried last year is equal to more than twenty-eight rides for every man, woman and child in that State. Of passengers carried since 1868, 115 have been fatally injured, and of employes, 27 have been killed while engaged at work on trains. During that time 277 persons have been run over and killed while walking or lying upon the track.

Process of Cremation.

Prof. Brunette gives the details of the apparatus that would be required for the process of incremation. After having made several experiments on the human subject, in which the bodies were burned in the retorts of gas manufactories in closed receptacles, and with access of air, he first satisfied himself that the complete and perfect performance of the process would be impossible under all ordinary circumstances. In the first place, there is required an oblong furnace of fire-proof bricks, having ten holes below, by means of which the intensity of the fire can be regulated. The upper part of this should be hollowed to receive the coffin, and over this a domed cover is to be placed, by which the flames, as in a reverbatory furnace, may be directed upon the body. Within the coffin is a metal supporter-table on which the body rests, fixed by thick iron wire. The operation embraces three periods—the heating of the body, the spontaneous combustion, and finally the incineration of the soft parts, and the calcination of the bones. During the first period, and about half an hour after the pile of wood in the furnace has been lighted, the combustion of the body commences. It give off a large quantity of gas, and the management of the reverbatory part of the furnace is of great importance. If the wood has been well arranged, two hours suffice to produce perfect carbonisation. During the third period, the air-holes being opened, the carbonized mass is collected and placed upon a fresh plate, and the heat is now urged to the utmost; a fresh supply of wood is inserted. By means of this arrangement, at the expense of about 150 pounds of wood, complete incremation—that is to say, incremation of the soft parts and calcination of the bones—may be effected in two hours. When the furnace has cooled, the cinders and bones are collected and deposited in a funeral urn.—London Lancet.

The Shirt that Opened Behind.

A man in Greenfield, whom we will call William, got up the other morning and proceeded to put on a shirt which his wife had just made for him, after a new pattern. As she stood at the mirror curling her hair, she heard a suppressed sound, half way between a groan and an oath, and turning round, said, laughing—"Why, my dear!" "Shut up!" he ejaculated. "You are a born fool! Never let a woman attempt to fit a shirt; she can't do it; it is one of the impossibilities!" "But, William," deprecatingly. "Don't you talk—let me talk! Do you think I'm going down town in this rig? A pretty disposition you've got!" Just because I happened to find a little fault last week with your ironing, you must go and make me a shirt without a bosom! Such malicious conduct, madam, is unpardonable. Shut up, I say—I won't hear a word! When a starched shirt front is the only finery that a man indulges in, is he not excusable for being particular in regard to that, I should like to know? And this thing sets like the mischief. Look how baggy it is in front and it feels behind as if there was a board bound across me!" walking up and looking in the glass, hitching up first one shoulder and then the other, after the indescribable manner of men trying a new garment. His wife dared not speak, but bringing a good-sized mirror from the next room, she held it up behind him for a moment; and, perceiving by his chop-fallen expression that he saw the point and the front, she ran down stairs to settle the coffee and see that Bridget had set the table geometrically. As William walked down to his office that morning, he said to the first friend that he met: "I tell you, Tom, that little wife of mine is a born genius. Look at this shirt, now; she cut and made it all herself; no confounded buttonholes to bother a fellow. Just send your wife up for the pattern." And it was by the way of Tom's wife that Lizzie first knew that William was pleased with his shirts.

The Egyptian Capital.

Bayard Taylor writes from Alexandria, Egypt, to the New York Tribune:

In the older streets, and especially in the native bazars, all is gay, diversified, Oriental. The faces, costumes and dialects of Syria, Tripoli, and Tunis are mixed with those of Egypt, and even groups of wondering Desert Arabs are a daily sight. I saw several this morning, evidently very much puzzled by a collection of large children's dolls in a shop window; their faces were an interesting study. But with what a simple dignity they wore their ragged burnooses! What fine, statuesque grace in every deliberate movement or gesture! These pictures, which meet you at every turn, give to the newer portion of Alexandria, which is architecturally like Leghorn or Marseilles, a semi-Oriental character. Of its 225,000 inhabitants, at least 100,000 are of European blood. It has more than doubled in twenty years, and the rubbish of unfinished or demolished buildings meets your eye wherever you go. The banking capital of the city is estimated at $125,000,000—not much less than that of New York, where, however, the amount of business is not always an evidence of the basis upon which it is carried on. Where everybody rode on donkeys, in 1852, there are now superb equipages, and the rich merchants are building up a suburb of sumptuous villas and gardens at Ramleh, four or five miles to the eastward of the city.

Ammonia for Whooping-Cough.

A writer in the Medical Journal, London, states that in case of whooping-cough in the last stage—that is, after the third week—he has had once ounce of the strongest liquid ammonia put into a gallon of water in an open pan, and the steam kept up by means of half a brick made red-hot throughout, and put into the boiling water containing the ammonia, the pan being placed in the middle of a room, into which the patients were brought as the ammonia steam was passing off. The method, he says, was used in the evening, before bedtime, and it proved so efficacious in abating the spasmodic attack, and after three or four days terminating the malady, as to establish, beyond doubt, the value of this mode of inhaling ammonia as a therapeutic agent in tranquilizing the nervous system in the whooping-cough.

Driving Oxen.

I never had any trouble driving oxen, though I know a man who'd as soon try to drive lions as to pick up a whip and undertake to "haw Buck," and "gee Bright."

Always commence right with oxen. They don't appear tender-hearted, and don't seem to the casual observer to be longing for sympathy, but oxen have feelings which must be consulted. If you want to yoke up your oxen, take the yoke on your shoulder and gently approach the starboard ox. If he moves away, throwing his heels in the air, turn about and approach the other, for in the long run it doesn't make a cent's worth of difference which ox is yoked up first, though there are men who always pull on the left boot first, and would persist in it if the house was on fire.

If the inboard ox runs away, don't throw the yoke at him, and jump up and down and howl. You can't throw a yoke over twenty rods at the most, and the chances are you wouldn't hit him. Take the yoke on your back again and saunter across the pasture toward the first ox. Approach him as if you didn't care a cent whether you got the yoke on him or not. Let your face wear a smile, and whistle some careless air. If he shows a disposition to run away, don't go to howling:

"Whoa there—hold on—I'll kill you—blast your eyes—hold on!"

Keep up your indifferent demeanor, and in about one hour and a half you can put your hand on the ox. Rub his back and speak encouraging words to him, and let him see that your are his true friend. In a little time you can put the yoke on him, and then start off after the other ox on the far side of the field. If he makes a bolt for the barn, preserve your careless air, and, above all, don't pound the ox you have already secured. By a persistent exercise of patience, you can get the pair yoked up and ready for business by ten o'clock, if you commenced early enough. Don't chain 'em up to a stump and maul 'em with a rail after you have them in your power; seek to conquer by love rather than force.

Few farmers know how to draw out the full strength of a pair of oxen on a dead pull. They set the team off with a yell, kick one, pound the other, scream at both, jump over the log and whoop, and the result is that the bovines jerk and jump and waste their strength. The right way is to send them off gently. Pretend that you are unhitching the chain to go home, and you don't know how much this will encourage them. When the chain is taut, and the oxen are ready for the pull, give them a kind word, tell them their motto should be "Excelsior," and that England expects every man to do his duty. Don't throw rocks at them. An experience of forty odd years has convinced me that nothing will discourage an ox so quick as to hurl a stone quarry at him when he is doing his level best to accommodate you.

In driving oxen before a wagon, don't carry a bean-pole with a brad-awl fastened into the end. The ox is not as swift on foot as the antelope or gazelle, and they shouldn't be made to gallop over ten miles without a rest. There is nothing so good to rule the brute creation as kindness. The true farmer will, if necessary, sit up all night with a pair of wild oxen, giving them kind advice, explaining matters, and rubbing their spinal columns with a cob to bring out their gentle natures and win their confidence and esteem.—M. Quad.

A KENTUCKY paper reports what it denominates a living wonder. It says Dora Chambers, born on Skeggs creek, Warren county, Ky., on the 11th of August, 1871, is thirty-seven inches high, eighteen inches around the calf of the leg, twenty-eight and three-fourths inches around the thigh, forty-eight inches around the hips, forty-two inches around the waist, and weighs 118 pounds and a half. The parents of this child are said to be delicate, small persons, the father weighing 127 pounds and the mother 114. There was nothing extraordinary about the child at its birth, but when about three months old she began to grow fat, and at the age of two and a half years had gained the proportions above stated.

WHAT WE ARE COMING TO.—A Troy cremationist asks, wouldn't it be pleasant to receive a dispatch something like this some day:

DEAR MOTHER: William died at noon to-day. Ashes by mail.
Yours in sorrow, JOHN SMITH.

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

The Farm.

My lord rides through his palace gate,
My lady sweeps along in state,
The sage thinks long on many a thing,
And the maiden muses on merrying ;
The minstrel harpeth merrily,
The sailor plows the foaming sea,
The huntsman kills the good red deer,
And the soldier wars without e'er fear ;
But fall to each whate'er befall,
The farmer he must feed them all.

Smith hammereth cherry red the sword,
Priest preacheth pure the Holy Word,
Dame Alice worketh broidery well,
Clerk Richard tales of love can tell,
The tap-wife sells her foaming beer,
Dan Fisher fisheth in the mere,
And courtiers ruffle, strut and shine,
While pages bring the gascon wine ;
But fall to each whate'er befall,
The farmer he must feed them all.

Man buildeth his castle fair and high,
Wherever river runneth by,
Great cities rise in every land,
Great churches show the builder's hand,
Great arches, monuments and towers,
Fair palaces and pleasing bowers ;
Great work is done, be 't here or there,
And well man worketh everywhere ;
But work or rest, whate'er befall,
The farmer he must feed them all.

RAINY days are the best to oil harness. It saves time and the harness dries slower, which is beneficial.

ENCOURAGE home manufactures, if it does cost a little more at first. It will all come back to you in various unnoticed avenues.

WHY is it that some men always have good crops in bad seasons? It is from the fact that Providence helps those that help themselves.

BE careful to bathe horses, shoulders just beginning spring work, three times a day with cold water. If the shoulders are tender, use a decoction of white oak bark.

THE American Stock Journal says : "For gravel in horses, give two-thirds of a tablespoonful of saltpeter in a little salt, for three consecutive days ; or take a pint of watermelon seed, and boil it in two quarts of water till reduced to nearly one-half, and drench two mornings in succession ; your horse will be cured."

VALUE OF HIDES AT HOME.—The skin of an animal, whether cow, colt or horse, that dies on the farm, is worth more at home than at the tanner's. Cut it into narrow strips, and shave off the hair with a sharp knife, before the kitchen fire, or in your workshop on stormy days and evenings. You may make them soft by rubbing. A rawhide halter strap an inch wide will hold a horse and last longer than an inch rope. It is stronger than hoop-iron and more durable, and may be used to hoop dry casks and boxes, and for hinges. Try it on a broken thill, or any woodwork that has been split. Put it on wet and nail it fast.

A WRITER who has devoted his life to raising onions, says : "None but a novice would ever thin onions. I did it the first year, and spoiled full one-quarter of the crop by the operation, and have never repeated it. Onions will grow in bunches, and I think bottom better where they crowd each other, even though the center ones are lifted entirely out of the ground. So long as the roots reach into the soil the bulbs will keep on growing, though they may be an inch or more above the surface of the ground. Where the seed is sown by a drill, there will be no occasion for thinning, except possibly where the drill stops, and a spoonful of seed falls in one spot.

TO DESTROY LICE.—The best preparations for the removal of lice from cattle, young or old, are a salve of fresh lard ground up with fine sulphur (one ounce of sulphur to four ounces of lard), and raw linseed oil mixed with kerosene oil in the proportion of four parts of linseed to one of kerosene. These should be rubbed from between the ears all around the backbone to the root of the tail about twice a week. Two applications are generally sufficient. They are not in any degree hurtful if they are licked by the cattle. Lice which have been placed in contact with a small quantity of either of these mixtures were immediately killed, while mercurial ointment and carbolic acid failed to kill them in several hours.—N. Y. Tribune.

FACTS IN FATTENING CATTLE.—Boussingault estimates that an ox weighing 748 pounds, fed upon 40 pounds per diem, will increase in weight about two pounds daily. According to Mr. Low, an ox weighing 770 pounds and consuming 223 pounds of turnips per week, if he thrives, will gain in the same time nearly fourteen pounds in weight. Allowing 100 pounds of hay worth 76 pounds of turnips, the increase is still about two pounds a day.

Mr. Dubois says the quantity of green fodder consumed by an ox during the eight months when he is fattening, is equivalent to 6,600 pounds of dry hay. The average ration of green forage per diem, he calculates, therefore, is equivalent to about twenty-seven pounds of hay.

Mr. Stephenson estimates that 56 per cent. of the whole animal will be butcher's meat ; 8 per cent. tallow ; 6 per cent. hide ; and 29 per cent. entrails. This, of course, depends upon the condition of the beef—a fat one will yield a greater per cent. of meat at fifty-three to sixty-two per cent.—Rural New-Yorker.

The Household.

A GENUINE corn-pone is made thus : Corn meal and water mixed to a rather stiff batter, salted to taste, and baked well in a hot oven.

DROP GINGER CAKE.—One cup of molasses, half a cup of butter, half a cup of water, three cups of flour, two teaspoonfuls of ginger, one of soda. Drop with a spoon on a buttered tin.

PLAIN CAKE.—One cup butter, one cup of syrup, three cups of flour, half a cup sweet milk, five eggs, one spoon cream-of-tartar, half a spoon of soda, plenty of spice. Bake in a square tin.

LIGHT CORN BREAD.—Scald one quart white corn meal with one quart hot water ; then add half cup molasses, one teaspoonful salt and one quart cold water. Stir well, and add one quart meal, half pint yeast. Let rise in a warm place for ten hours, then stir well, put in the skillet and bake by the fireplace four hours. If you haven't hop yeast add half pint salt-rising yeast before putting to bake.

CORN meal cakes for a morning dish : One quart of sour milk ; two or three eggs ; a teaspoonful of saleratus, not heaped ; two level full of salt. Mix thick with corn meal, and fry after steak, or in lard.

HASTY RUSKS.—Two eggs, one pint of flour, one cup of sugar, one cup of milk, one dessert-spoonful of butter, one teaspoonful of soda, two teaspoonfuls of cream tartar. To be made up and baked immediately thereafter.

PUDDING SAUCE.—One-half teacup of butter, one and a half teacups of sugar and one pint of strawberries mashed till juicy. (Canned berries may be substituted for fresh ones.) Beat the butter and sugar to a cream, then stir in the berries.

FRENCH CAKE.—Two cups of sugar, four cups of flour, three-quarters of a cup of butter, one cup of milk, four eggs, two teaspoonfuls of cream tartar, one teaspoonful of bi-carbonate of soda. To be flavored with rose-water and baked in tins.

DELICIOUS DRESSING FOR FOWLS.—Spread pieces of stale but tender wheat bread liberally with butter and season rather highly with salt and pepper, working them into the butter a little; then dip the bread in wine, and use it in as large pieces as is convenient to stuff the bird. The delicious flavor which the wine gives is very penetrating, and gives to the fowl a rich, gamey character which is very pleasant.

A NICE OMELET.—Beat two eggs, yolks and whites together, in a bowl, until very light. In a cup put one tablespoonful of corn starch ; add slowly a half teaspoonful of milk (new milk is best) ; when well stirred and smooth, pour this over the eggs, and beat them all well together for a few minutes ; a little chopped parsley can be added if wished. Cook as other omelets. In making any kind of omelet, salt and pepper should not be added until sent to the table ; and to have them perfectly light and tender the ingredients must be well and quickly beaten with the fork.

REMEDY FOR SORE THROAT.—Take one large red pepper, such as are grown for family use ; steep in half a pint of water, after which strain in a quart of molasses, adding a little vinegar ; boil all together to a thin syrup ; use this whenever the throat feels dry or disagreeable ; if it be in dead of night it will soothe the throat (and not irritate) and warm it up well. If sharper than can be borne in the mouth, put it back near the palate with a spoon and swallow ; apply outwardly a thin slice of salt pork, warming it up well in vinegar and pepper ; apply as hot as can be borne on the throat.—Medical Journal.

Pitman Perforated.

Pitman's woodpile has suffered a good deal lately from the ravages of thieves, so the old gentleman the other day loaded his gun with coarse salt, and expressed his determination to bombard the first man who should be observed to haunt the timber. On Wednesday morning he had to attend court, and as he did not expect to reach home until late in the evening, Mrs. Pitman felt it her duty to keep an eye upon the woodpile. But Pitman returned about dusk, and as he walked up the yard he thought he might as well carry in enough wood to last all night. He had just placed the fourth stick upon his arm when an explosion occurred, and the same instant he felt as if a million red-hot darning needles were dancing up and down his legs. He had heard from Mrs. Pitman. He yelled with pain, and dropping the wood, most of it upon his toes, he fell to the ground. Just as he did so, he saw Mrs. Pitman standing in the kitchen doorway with his firearm at "parade rest," and contemplating her victory and her victim with serenity. Pitman's first thought was that she had suddenly been animated by an insane but judicious desire to realize upon his life insurance policy. But when he screamed to her, she dropped her artillery and flew to the scene with expressions of alarm and grief at the discovery that she had perforated Pitman. She called the servant girl, and as they carried him into the house, she explained that she mistook him for a thief, and then she apologized. Pitman said it was all very well to apologize, but what good was that to a man with two quarts of salt and half a pound of gun-wads in his legs. Mrs. Pitman insisted that he oughtn't to mind a little salt, it would do him good. She urged that salt was better than anything else for preserving meat, and that his legs would probably be alive and well and prancing around the universe when the rest of him was dead and spoiled. That made him mad, and after splitting up his gun with the ax, he went to bed, and he hasn't spoken to Mrs. Pitman since ; but he has hinted gloomily to the doctor that if a divorce can be had he will obtain one.—Max Adeler.

The Vienna Panic.

From the statistics of an Austrian journal of finance, it appears that the Vienna panic was much more wide-spread and disastrous than was generally supposed at the time. In Austria eight banking houses, representing an aggregate capital of 15,200,000 florins ; two insurance companies, representing 3,800,000 florins ; one railway company, representing 600,000 ; and seven industrial establishments, representing 3,000,-000 florins, have failed outright. Forty banking establishments, with 139,400,000 florins capital ; insurance companies, with 5,200,000 florins ; one traffic establishment, with 1,000,000 florins ; eighteen building societies, with 61,900,000 florins, and thirty-four industrial establishments, with 46,600,-000 florins, have resorted to liquidation. In Hungary as many as ten banks, with 3,300,000 florins capital, and two industrial establishments, with 800'000 florins, have declared their failure ; while thirteen banks, with 11,300,000 florins ; two insurance companies, with 800,000 florins ; one traffic establishment, with 4,800,000 ; one building society, with 200,000 florins, and forty industrial establishments, with collectively 5,800,000 florins, have been driven to liquidation. The number of fusions or amalgamations effected is not stated.

A City of Glass.

Consumption has found an earnest opponent, perhaps a conqueror. Mr. George A. Shove, in a book Osgood & Co. are about to publish, suggests a city of refuge for consumptives. It is not to be in the Sunny South. There are such cities there now for those who can afford to go to them. The new one is to be in bleak New England, but perpetual summer is to reign within its walls. It is to consist of a monstrous structure of iron and glass, covering forty acres of ground. Graceful iron towers are to strengthen the walls, and to contain the steam-engines which will maintain a summer temperature throughout the long Northern winters. A great dome will rise in the center—"a dome of the Invalides," says the authentic author, "of even more magnificent proportions than the famous land-mark of strangers in the French capital." Within the building the iron columns will be covered with luxuriant vines. The whole interior will be a park, with lawn and ponds and croquet-grounds, with trees, and shrubs and flowers. Bands will play. Birds will sing. The January sunshine will pour into this Garden of Eden like that of June. Moreover, the Adams and Eves of the nineteenth century will escape the intense heat of New England's brief but scorching summers. Artificially-cooled air will be forced into the building. Around this central structure a glass-covered avenue will run, lined on the outer side with hotels and theaters and stores. The cost of the gigantic conservatory with the attached hotels is estimated at $12,000,000. The interest on this, at 8 per cent., would be $960,000. Add to this sum the cost of boarding 10,000 visitors from November to June ($2,500,000), and we have $3,460,000.

If the 10,000 paid only $2 a day apiece, the enterprise would net $940,000 over expenses and interest on capital. The question is, would the 10,000 come? Mr. Shove shows, by the census mortality charts, that pulmonary consumption causes over one-fifth of all the deaths in New England, in Northwestern New York, in Eastern New Jersey, and in other localities. It is far more deadly than small-pox or cholera, but we adopt the greatest precautions against these diseases, and apparently regard the other as a decree of fate. This resignation is partially explained by the fact that in its treatment drugs have proved a failure. So, indeed, have doctors. The disease is practically incurable, unless the victim can spend the winters in some sunny clime. Since the city of glass will be the only refuge for the great majority of the tens of thousands who are dying of this dread disease, Mr. Shove considers it but fair to calculate that one of those tens will be constantly living in the oasis he wishes to construct in the midst of the bleak desert of snow that covers New England with a shroud for so many months and sets so many fingers sewing on other shrouds.—Chicago Tribune.

Statistics of Intemperance.

The testimony of competent judges is decided in the opinion that the use of ardent spirits is hurtful to health and long life, and the old-fashioned calculations of Neison, in his "Vital Statistics," are confirmed by the researches of the General Life Office. According to these estimates, the probability of death among drinkers between 21 and 40 years is ten times as much as among the whole population ; between 41 and 60 years, four times as much ; and among habitual tipplers over 60 years of age, twice as much as among the people at large. In England, 1850–59, more than 8,000 cases were reported of men who had literally drank themselves to death. Neison has given us his investigation of 6,111 tipplers ; that out of 1,000, 58.4 die annually, while out of 1,000 inhabitants of the same age only 19 die. Thus the mortality among drinkers is three times as great as in the community at large. He has carried out his calculations into all ages, and shown how this chronic self-murder marvelously diminishes the expectation of life. The highest point as to numbers is found in the years 1851–60, which report 192 men and 44 women intemperate out of 10,000, in England and Wales, and which reckon the diminution in the rate of expectation of life accordingly. This last statement is most startling, and shows a falling-off in the probable term of life for each ten years, from 20 to 60 and upward, of respectively 28, 22, 17, 10 and 5 years, with fractions, and amounting to the fearful percentage, respectively, of 35, 38, 40, 51 and 63 per cent. of probable life, as compared with the population. Surely strong drink is slow fire ; and intemperance is voluntary madness and chronic suicide.—Dr. Samuel Osgood, in Harper's Magazine for May.

FISH.—The fish of the United States are unsurpassed in flavor in the world. Sportsmen who, with rod and line, have whipped European waters, say there is nothing like them there from the Norway fiords to the Guadalquiver. Africa and Asia are both poor in this respect. Even in China, where fish is an abundant article of food, and is found in great variety, the flesh is coarse. The salmon of the Scotch lochs afford the nearest approach to the succulence and tender delicacy of our mountain trout and the flaky tenderness of our salmon trout. Then there are the whitefish, the bass, the shad, and an innumerable multitude of others. We have but one rival, and that a prolific but small one. It is the French sardine when fresh. This delicious fish in a few years will cease its rivalry, however, if reports are true from the coast of France. At present the sardine fisheries employ twenty thousand men, women and children on land to prepare the fish for market. Each year shows an advance in the price and a diminution in the catch, and in no great time over-fishing will have produced its usual consequence—a failure of the fish.

THE GRANGER.

Whose labor feeds the continent ?
Whose vote elects the President ?
Who pays of tax the large per cent ?
The Granger.

And earns his bread by honest toil,
And hates political turmoil ?

And strikes his blows for country dear ?
The Granger.

Who showed the back-pay Congress ring
That robbing people's not the thing,
And made them all "peccavi" sing ?

The Subordinate Grange.

The season of the busy cares of the farm has commenced, and we fear that this year, as in the past, many Patrons will neglect their monthly grange. When one member goes, sacrificing the day to the cause, and finds his brother and neighbor at home on his farm, it will tempt the first to stay away next time. Thus the grange is neglected—its business abandoned, and its joyous social features forgotten, until the grange is broken up. Our enemies (and strange to say they are those who live off of us) take every advantage of the weakness of our organization, to scatter our influence and patronage. To succeed, we must keep up our meetings, winter and summer. The business demands it. Our social enjoyments require it. Our physical system is benefited by a monthly day of relaxation. No one is so deeply immersed but what he can give one day or half a day a month to social, physical and business recreation. The subordinate grange is the head of the order. It is its life and support. It is the fountain from which flows the nourishment of all other branches. Unless this department is in good working order—unless its members are here thoroughly drilled in their duties and privileges, harmony can never prevail, and all its unregulated struggles will be in vain. Then we beseech the membership of all subordinate granges to lay down the rule as settled, that no other work or engagements shall interfere with the monthly meetings. Meet for business—for enjoyment—for rest—for social intercourse—for the exchange of sympathy and congratulation—for cultivating more neighborly love and fellowship—for adding additional zests to health, life and happiness.

Some say they are tired of the grange. That is not astonishing. Some are tired of the world with all its sweet songs, beautiful flowers, hallowed associations, invigorating sunshine and refreshing showers. God in his infinite wisdom and merciful goodness could not make a world or a paradise that would satisfy some mortals. But the great mass of the Patrons, where the grange is conducted in the full spirit of the Order, are delighted with its business arrangements and social economy. For the farmer and his wife it has charms no other institution has—mixing business with social enjoyments. Then we beseech the brothers and sisters throughout the State to keep up faithfully their monthly meetings. Neglect not the feast. Give yourselves time for business and for social intercourse. Make careful arrangements for the wants and necessities of the neighborhood. Confine not your charity or kind offices to the membership. Let all enjoy your bounty and kind attention. If any member is sick and cannot attend, see that a portion of the feast be sent to the afflicted. If the food cannot be eaten, the kind feeling of the membership will be enjoyed. There are many ways a kind heart can make sunshine in the dark hours of a sick-room. Let not your narrow soul convince you that all the grange proposes to do is to get a pound of coffee for a cent less. It is an organization for educating man to a higher atmosphere of enjoyment, and a noble impulse of action. It is intended to call away his mind, at stated periods, from the grosser subjects of money-making, to higher intellectual and social life, and a more refined estimate of duty to the world and to others. If the subordinate grange is fully appreciated, and its duties faithfully performed, the march to victory will be along a road adorned with flowers, the social virtues furnishing music to enliven the tedium of the journey.—Des Moines Register.

County Councils.

This branch of the organization of the Patrons is evidently to become the main-stay and work-shop of the order. The State organization is too unwieldy—too expensive, and too diversified in its interests to work rapidly and energetically. The subordinate grange is too feeble—lacking power and comprehension. But with live subordinate granges, cultivating the social features, and working up to the regulations of the county council, sending its best men and women to plan and counsel, and we have just the organization to carry out the plans for the up-building of the former. Subordinate granges must be careful to select enterprising men who are not backward in spending one or two days every three months in close and arduous consultation about the wants and the means of relieving the necessities of the agriculturist. We want men who will not be thinking of or demanding the mileage or per diem, but men who feel that they have a work to do. Too often the grange appoint men for such positions who seek them for the position or notoriety it will give them or the money it will put in their pockets. The order is already cursed by such. There are good men all over the country, but they are seldom found seeking position. Compel them into service.

In our county councils there is not enough fraternal interchange of opinions with adjoining councils. The order is yet feeling its way, and all the light that is eliminated by the conflict of minds in our councils should be more largely enjoyed by adjoining councils. There are men among us ready and capable for this work, without drawing largely upon the finances. It is folly to deny that we are yet sadly deficient in many things—many of our plans fail—many of our ideas are crude and impracticable. Neighboring councils may have better plans—may save us from experimenting, where they have already demonstrated. It is an easy matter to send two delegates to the quarterly meetings of neighboring councils, and it may save a county from a year of disastrous experimenting. And as the county councils are evidently to become the stay and motive power of the order, care should be taken in their organization. Every grange in the county should be faithfully represented. Give time for deliberation. Select the best men for agents, for the membership and the world will decide as to the prosperity and perpetuity of the order by its agents. Men incompetent to transact their own, should not be trusted with the public business. If we cannot make our councils a working body, there is no hope of our stability. Place on guard as your representatives none but sound men, who love the order and will work for its prosperity.—Iowa State Register.

Women in the Grange.

The social feature of the grange is one of its best elements of success. Farmers' wives and daughters have too little opportunity to visit their neighbors. The social enjoyments are swallowed up in the drudgery of the kitchen, dairy, garden and nursery. Their daily lives are too much like the tread-mill routine. In the monthly meetings of the grange, while they lend a sanctifying influence, they are revived in spirits, instructed by an exchange of opinions about household duties, the changes in fashions, as well as the best means of turning the products of the dairy, the eggs, chickens, or other surplus, to the best account for pin-money. They can do good in the grange, and wherever they are useful, there is the place for women. In the past three years in the grange we have seen women awakened to a new life. Where sadness and indifference was visible in every lineament, life, energy and vivacity have sprung up anew, lightening her labors, making her more cheerful in her family, and reminding her husband of former days. The women go to the grange monthly, and there meet and talk with friends and neighbors that otherwise they would not meet for the entire winter. There they discuss the questions of the best magazines, agricultural papers, and the new books that have come into the neighborhood. There they learn of the cases of sickness or want either in or out of the grange, and take the steps to provide for such cases. There they learn the character of the young ladies or young men who have come into the neighborhood, with whom their sons and daughters may fall in company. They go to the grange to get rid of their low spirits, their lonesomeness, and to satisfy their longings after society and congenial spirits. Let the women come. They are needed wherever they can do us or themselves good. They are needed in the grange to keep up its interest when all other sources fail. They give it dignity and character. They purify its atmosphere and refine all its deliberations. Without them the harvest feasts would choke in our throats, and no one would look forward with interest to the next monthly meeting, without those who always cheer our pathway. And those granges that meet only evenings at country school-houses are losing nearly all the delightful social features of the Patrons. Come to the grange, ladies, and talk about what you please. Wear your best calico, and be relieved for a few hours from the drudgery of the house and family, and you will feel for the month a renewed pleasure in life, and your duties will be relieved of half their burdens.—Exchange.

The Grangers in Wisconsin.

The Executive Committee of the Wisconsin State Grange have held a meeting, at which it was ascertained that the whole number of subordinate granges in the State is now 430, all but 100 of which have been organized since the 1st of March, 1873. These have an average membership of 49 each, making 19,780 grangers in the State. Under these, 41 county councils have been organized, to attend to the purchasing of supplies for the different granges, and to manage the co-operative stores, factories and mills already begun. A law has also been passed enabling them to incorporate local fire insurance companies, of which 29 are already doing business. They usually include about four civil townships within their assigned territory, give the offices of President and Secretary to some of the local town officers, charge from 1 to 2 mills on the dollar, besides a policy and survey fee of $1.50, for carrying risks, and yet there has not been a failure to meet a liability. Several of them are carrying from $400,000 to $800,000 each in risks, and, while the insurance is cheap, the satisfaction given is universal, so far as reported to the State Executive Committee.

PRINCE FREDERICK CHARLES, of Prussia, intends to start on a tour around the world in July, and expects to be away from Berlin about a year and a half. His route will be across Russia and Siberia ; thence to Japan ; thence to China, from where he will come to the United States.

THE SHORTEST WAY HOME.

"The shortest way by half a mile—
I come so very often by it—
Is up the road, across the stile,
And through the meadow. Shall we try it ?"
The days were not without a charm
When, talking soft and looking silly,
My love and I walked arm in arm.
The lanes were lone and fields were stilly.

We found so many things to say,
That always, in the shiny weather,
We took the—well, the shorter way,
To be a longer time together.
We spoke about (but goodness knows
Our topics of confabulation)
About the weather, I suppose,
The crops, the harvest, and the nation.

At all events, although the talk
Was neither wise nor witty,
We ended each successive walk
With "Home already—what a pity !"
We might have lost a little ground
Through coming by the road selected,
But both agreed that we had found
The journey shorter than expected.

Can life's experiment support
The paradox that love proposes ?
Does any path seem very short,
Unless it be a path of roses ?
We seldom find the nearer way,
And if we hit upon and take it,
By creeping on from to-day
It seems as long as length can make it.

The road to fame is never brief,
The way to wealth is dull and dreary ;
All earthly routes, in my belief,
Are very long and very weary.
Nay—one that leads through care and strife
Is short, when mortals once begin it ;
We take the "near cut" out of life,
Although we take the longest in it.

SPAIN.—The war in Spain, like the war in Cuba and in all Spanish countries, is interminable. Queen Isabella was deposed in June, 1868, and the war has been raging ever since, and with no more prospect of an early termination than five years ago. The Carlists are stronger now than they have been since the contest begun, and the Government seems powerless to subdue them. The fact is, Spain is only fit for an absolute despotism or an oligarchy. That is the only form of government for which the people have any respect. The result is that civil war in Spain always descends to brigandage, the "troops" fighting on the side which pays best or permits the greatest license. The wars in Spain, forty years ago, over the Carlist succession, became so atrociously inhuman that civilization was at last aroused, and the nations of Europe had to bring it to a conclusion by force. The present war will have to be closed, perhaps, in the same way.

ONE of the most wonderful things in the world is the uniformity of apparent accidents. Thus, in Great Britain, where the statistics are much better preserved than in this country, the total number of deaths by human violence in 1870 was 16,953 ; in 1869 it was 16,497 ; it was 16,068 in 1868 ; 16,866 in 1867 ; 16,915 in 1866 ; 17,374 in 1865, and 17,018 in 1864. Not only that, but the same uniformity extends to the manner in which the victims met their death.

The House that Jack Built. — "The house tnat Jack built" had interesting antecedents. This famous jingling legend is believed to be an imitation to mediæval Hebrew parable in the form of a hymn, but commemorative of the principal events in th. history of the Jewish people. The original is to be found in the Jewish collection called the Seper Haggaha, volume twenty-third, and an interpretation was given to the world so far back as 1731, by P. N. Lebrecht of Leipsic. There are ten verses. The first consists of two lines and a short refrain, thus: "A kid, a kid, my father bought for two pieces of money." Refrain: "A kid, a kid." This refrain is repeated at the end of each verse. The second verse commences with the words, "Then came the cat and ate the kid that my father bought for two pieces of money." The third verse runs, "Then came the dog and bit the cat, that ate the kid," etc. The fourth is, "Then came the staff, that beat the dog, that bit the cat," etc. The fifth is, "Then came the fire, and burned the staff, that beat the dog," etc. The sixth is, "Then came the water, and quenched the fire, that burned the staff," etc. The seventh is, "Thom came the ox, and drank the water, that quenched the fire," etc. The eighth is, "Then came the butcher and slew the ox, that drank the water," etc. The ninth is, "Then came the angel of death, and killed the butcher, that slew the ox," etc. The tenth and last runs, "Then came the Holy One, blessed be He, and killed the angel of death, that killed the butcher, that slew the ox, that drank the water, that quenched the fire, that burned to staff, that beat the pog, that bit the cat, that ate the kid, that my father bought for two pieces of money: a kid, a kid."—It is evident that this is the model of "The House that Jack Built."

"No blister draws sharper than interest does. Of all industries none is comparable to that of interest. It works all day and night, in fair weather and foul. It has no sound in its footsteps, but travels fast. It gnaws at a man's substance with invisible teeth. It binds industry with its film, as a fly is bound in a spider's web. Debts roll a man over and over, binding hand and foot, and letting him hang upon the fatal mesh until the long-legged interest devours him. There is but one thing on a farm like it, and that is the Canada thistle, which swarms new plants every time you break its roots; whose blossoms are prolific, and every flower the father of a million seeds. Ever leaf is an awl every branch a spear, and every plant like a platoon of bayonets, and a field of them like an armed host. The whole plant is a torment and a vegetable curse. And yet a farmer had better make his bed of Canada thistles than to be at ease upon interest."

Perils of the Ball Room.

Chicago Inter-Ocean.

We have ever regarded a ball room as the happy hunting ground of loveliness, where eyes spoke love to eyes which spoke again, and all that sort of thing; but we can never look upon it in that light again. The glory hath departed. Ichabod! One Dr. Lindeman has been making an investigation of false hair and chignons usually worn by ladies with the most dreadful results

Parasite bodies, known as gregarinidæ, grow at the extremities of the hair, forming little lumps, visible to the naked eye. Each of these lumps contains a colony of about fifty psorasyerms.

Under the influence of heat and moisture they (the lumps) swell, the granular contents being converted into little spheres, and then into pseudounavicellæ

These become free, and float in the air, and penetrate into the interior of the human organism, producing affections of the heart, Bright's disease, and pulmonary complaints! In a ball room, says the dreadful doctor, containing 50 ladies, 45,000,000 of navicellæ are set free! Just to think that we have gazed upon there lovely forms; these dreams of tarletan and lace, and even clasp them to our palpitating waistcoats in the mazes of the deux temps, when all the time they were sending into our circulating appartus millions of pseudonavicellæ to give us affections of the heart, Bright's disease, and pulmonary complaints! We knew that the fair beings occasionally caused disease of the heart, and the brightness of their eyes has often produced sleeplessness and loss of appetite; but we little thought that they carried in that hair, which has cast a spell over the masculine gender ever since the rib of Adam was transformed into a woman, a colony of psora perms to devour us, as Eve demolished the apple. Henceforth, when we gaze upon that floating wave which distinguished the ebb and flow of the German, we shall think of Edgar Poe and his little raven, and exclaim with that eccentric but level-headed bird, "Nevermore."

An Impulsive Married Man Seeks "Undine"

"Mary Ann, my love, let's go see undine."

"who's he?"

"He isn't anybody it's a play of Mr. Olympia's, and she's the mermaid"

'What's to become of the baby?'

'Lay him on the bed, molasses his toes, and he will amuse himself for a week.'

So we went—

Tinkle—tinkle, up went the curtain A gentleman in a purple velvet coat and no pantaloons said he was dry, and believed he would go under the Rhine where there were spirits; so he bids his servant Schnapps good-bye and jumps overboard—over the paste-board—into the seething waves. An angelic form approaches him. It is Undine, the Queen of the Rhine, whose gorgeous raiment consists of a golden star and a white lace shawl, while simultaneously green and red demons of the vasty deep scoot about promiscuous-like. Undine lures him away to the coral caves, where the golden-eyed catfish feed on silver plated shrimps Then the silver hued Index appears, arrayed "like on of these," and also a silver star for apparel, who leads Schnapps by a string, while 20 other sylph-like forms hung hug him and kiss him for his mo her—which compels him to sing, the Index ditto, and the sylph-like ditto, too, until a green devil jumps up through the bottom crust of the river and vamoses Schnapsy from the same. By and by the gentleman in a purple coat and no pantaloons gets tired of mermaids and goes to dry land again to marry the girl he left behind him. A white wig with a long red robe is her father, and he joins them by the hands and enjoins them to be happy, and for fear they won't he sets them on a throne to witness the festive arena of sports provided for the auspicious occasion. Now the fun begins. Whoo! My head is swimming yet—a swirl of music, a whirlwind of legs, a tempest of white arms, a hurricane of fleecy skirts, a scudding of bare poles, and Mary Ann wanted to go home. Not any' says I. I'll see this thing out, though my eye-balls start from their sockets and stand on end like pills on a fretful tomato vine, and I did. When the gentleman stood on his head on the neck of a decanter, Mrs. Peck propounded the question to me why a man wanted to stand on his head when he had two feet. "My dear," says I, "it's to show the feat," and I was amused at how she mused.

I was awfully tickled at the plump, pretty and cherry voiced, singers, the Suabian sisters of Ulm. They foamed over with mirth, like tri-lager. "Ah! isn't that sweet?' said the partner of my bosom, as the two little mites, dressed in tights, ascended the hights above the lights after kissing their Persian poppy good-bye, for fear they might never come down alive after doing their cat and monkey-like twistings and contortions on the trapeze; but they did come down and turned flip flaps all over the stage, until Mrs. F. [illegible] the conclusion that their backbones must have been extracted and gutta percha run in. About this time the army of Amazons began to march in, when Mary Ann rose as one man and insisted on leaving, nlens volens, and sniffled as an excuse that she was sure the baby must have fallen off the bed, and I had to start with her. My neck has a crick in it now, and it came from looking backward all the way, as we were going out. When I go again I'll go alone.

A newspaper reporter has been interviewing Governor Hendricks, from which we get the following:

I found the Governor busily engaged in his quit Executive office in the State buildings, south of Washington street, and opposite the dilapidated old State-house. You ascend a flight of wooden steps from the street and enter a spacious office occupied by Mr. Downey, the polite and obliging Private Secretary of the Governor. Adjoining this reception room is the private and executive office of Indiania's popular Governor. It is a very pleasant, but modes, apartment in the center of which stands a plain, large table, occupied by Governor Hendricks as his writing desk. A portrait of George Washington and one or two other ordinary pictures grace the walls. The floor is neatly carpeted and the room light and cheery. The Governor greets callers with a smile, and whether stranger or friend you will feel at ease at once.

The Governor does not think it comports with the duties and dignity of his office as Executive of a Commonwealth to enter actively into a controversy with the Executive of the Nation on a veto. But on the general subject of currency, his views are undoubtedly sound. He has constantly been in favor of a strong greenback currency, and of an increase of it if more is demanded by the business interests of the people. But he does not think that free banking would be either popular or sound or National policy. The people would be afraid of such promiscous currency. I hope to be able to give you the views of Gov. Hendricks more in detail on the currency question before long. Of one thing I feel able to say—that he is not a "contractionist," and that he appreciates the needs and wants of the West for more circulating medium. He perceives that a large majority of the people of both parties in the West ask for more currency, and for one he does not see that the request is unreasonable. Perhaps the unseemly impertinence of the old Governor Dix in rushing to the front to help the Grant party so vividly contrasts the duties and sphere of the Gubernatorial office with partizan officiousness that Gov. Hendricks hesitates even to give expression even to his entire views on the needs of the hour. That the Indiana Governor is in warmest sympathy with the people on this absorbing subject no doubt need be entertained. He would prefer perhaps, the modesty of even hiding his wisdom under a bushel, of listening rather than counseling, than the inconsistency of a Senator who clamored for specie when the tendency was for resumption, and now clamors for currency when he knows his Western constituents demand it. Consistency is a jewel that Senators should prize.

Judge McDonald thought that what ever evils might flow from the veto of of the President, one great good might come—a destruction of political iniquity, and a consequent reform, from the "Kilkenny cat fight" in the party in power. He thought outsiders could stand aloof and serenely and hopefully view the situation.

A serious question arises in the minds of the friends of

SENATOR MORTON.

It is, whether his present advocacy of currency inflation and its utter defeat by Grant will not destroy the Senator as a political futurist. You know it was said: "Why of course Grant will sign a currency bill. Morton strongly advocates, and Grant and Morton are twins. They are too deeply friends to differ. One has too much depending on the others good will." And so on. Now that they stand antagonists, and Grant triumphant, unyielding, the spectacle of Morton's loss of Grants good will, or of Grant's indifference to the "Great War Governor," is forced upon public attention. People who heretofore said: "Morton will carry the currency bill through; he is all powerful with the administration," now look glum and declare Morton a "dead duck." You remember Andy Johnston once referred to his little "dead duck Forney." Col. John W. F. never afterward recovered life. He squirms occasionally; but he is dractically defunct. Sic transit gloria mundi!

[illegible]

"Certainly Grant can't expect to be be elected again in the face of his veto, can he, Governor?"

"Oh, no?" answered Governor Hendricks. "No, no! he does not certainly now think of the third term. I believe he did not hope for it, but I am under the impression that he gave up the idea as hopeless long ago."

"Then arises the conundrum: who is the coming man? Have you any idea Governor?"

"Well, of course it is a mere speculation; but the three names which have been so often mentioned—Morton, Blaine and Conkling—have no doubt lost their power. You see, when you come to examine it, all of them have been mixed up some way or other in these rings or turmoils or other family jars. I don't think either of them has a particle of chance of even the party nomination. But there is a man but seldom if ever referred to who might come up strong for the forthcoming Administration race—I refer to E. B. Washburne, of Illinois now minister to Paris While much could be said to recommend him as a probable successful candidate, yet it is known that he is a warm personal friend of grant, and that with the people might kill him thoroughly."

These were some of the reflections of an hour's agreeable conversation with Governor Hendricks.

MRS. CLEM'S FATE.

While I sat in the Governor's room Judge Denny, Attorney-General of the State, came in and cordially greeted the Chief Executive, who kindly introduced your correspondent to the Judge.

"Governor I have just received information from Mr. Dye and the other attorneys that they can not go to Lebanon to look after the Clem case on account of the lack of money to pay expenses," observed Judge Denny to the Governor. Continuing, he said: The witnesses for the State are scattered; three in California, one in Texas, one in Ohio and one in Illinois. I have not before advised with you on the case as to what are your wishes."

"I hardly know what to do," responded the Governor, "but I do not feel like asking you to try the case. The case is a long one, and you are doubtless preoccupied. Moreover, I haven't the contingent fund to draw on to pay the expenses. Let's see; it would cost at least $1,600 to bring the three witnesses from California and return them; and Dr. Duzan from Texas, and the others—at least $2,500 in all. This county refuses to appropriate any more; and Boone does not feel like paying the expenses of prosecuting alleged

INDIANAPOLIS MURDERESSES,

However atrocious the crime, or interesting and mysterious the case. What is your opinion about what should be done, Judge?"

"I really do not feel competent to take up the case at this point; and the attorneys heretofore acting for the State say they are discharged."

"Do they say they are discharged."

"Yes; they so regard themselves."

"Wouldn't they proceed and look to the Legislature for compensation?"

"That was suggested to them, but they had doubts as to whether the Legislature would appropriate for that purpose."

"I would recommend it answered the Governor."

'They would decline to undertake the further prosecution on such hope,' replied the Attorney-General.

"Then I suppose the case will end."

"Yes, nolle prosequi will perhaps be entered,' suggested Sudge Denny

'How much did this county expend in that case?' I interrupted.

'About $23,000, I believe,' answered the Governor. 'You see they never elected a Prosecutor with talent enough to prosecute the case in this country.'

'That is considerable,' I remarked, 'but not exorbitant when we consider the atrocity and hellishness of the crime—one of the most revolting and hoinous of the criminal annals in America.' 'Yes, it was atrocious,' responded Gov. Hendricks.

'But I suppose it will end here, for the reasons Judge Denny has given, and the alleged murderess go at liberty, concluded the Govenor.

The announcement of the liberation of this remarkable woman, Mrs. Nancy E. Clem, will send a chill of disgust and shudder of anathema through perhaps two-thirds of the people of Indianapolis and Marion County, if not of the whole State. Much the larger portion of the people believe her to be clearly guilty.

EIGHTY YEARS AGO.

[Written by F. Russell, of Mexico, Mo., on the anniversary of his eightieth birthday.]

'Twas in New England's northern clime,
The earth then clad in snow,
That first I drew my infant breath,
Just eighty years ago.

How few the numbers now that live
In this our world below,
Who first inhaled their vital breath
Just eighty years ago.

The vast and complicated scenes
That truthful records show,
Appear like visionary dreams,
Since eighty years ago.

Our nation, then a little tree
Had just begun to grow,
Its boughs have spread from sea to sea,
Since eighty years ago.

Men went the rounds their fathers trod,
And elsewhere dare not go;
Tradition was their patron God,
Say eighty years ago.

And what improvements we have seen
Since eighty years ago.

When Fulton first condensed the steam,
How little did he know
Its mighty wonders we have seen

An angel might not know
The mighty wonders it has wrought

Beneath old ocean's dark recess,
Where rolling billows flow,
Fly telegrams with lightning-speed,
Since eighty years ago.

The numerous factories in our lands,
Do all combine to show
The genius of some cunning hands,

Religious heralds more or less,
Now flying to and fro,
All date their ages from the press
Since eighty years ago.

No mission to the heathen world,
Salvation's way to show.
No gospel banners there unfurled,
Since eighty years ago.

No Sabbath-schools to train the young
In paths that they should go.

Say eighty years ago.

The blood he caused to flow),
He and his empire rose and fell
Since eighty years ago.

Since eighty years ago,
That calls for gratitude to God,

When eighty years have come and gone,
O, shall I, can I know
The things on earth that have transpired

JOHN STEPHENS' PERICARDIUM.

"Now I am going to tell you just what my husband said to me this morning, doctor, word for word," and the invalid, Mrs. Stephens, lay back on the sofa pillow, the very picture of misery.

The family physician, who was called on an average to the Stephens mansion three hundred and sixty times a year, drew a chair close to the couch, and waited quietly for his patient to open her book of complaints.

"Last night, you see, doctor, I had an ill turn, and he wanted to come for you; but when I got so he dared to leave me, he concluded then we'd better let you sleep."

"Much obliged to him," said the doctor, with sarcastic emphasis on the personal pronoun. "Last night was the first undisturbed night's rest I have enjoyed for a week."

Mrs. Stephens continued:

"This spell is the same as I had the last time you were sent for, doctor—"

"A slight nervous attack," broke in the physician; "nothing more."

"Well, it don't make any difference what you call it, it was mighty hard to bear; but let me tell you what my husband said first, doctor, before we go into symptoms. When he was going down to breakfast, he says to me, 'Kate, what shall I send you up?'

"Says I, 'I don't want anything in the world but a good strong cup of tea. Tell Bridget to send it up in the little teapot.' I saw, doctor, that he didn't move after I said this, so I turned and looked up at him, and such a picture of rage and disgust I never saw in my life. Finally, says he, 'Tea! tea! tea! it's nothing but tea from morning till night, Kate,' says he; 'you are the color of a Chinaman now. Why don't you order a good piece of beefsteak and a slice of brown bread and a cup of chocolate? That would be a sensible breakfast.'

"'But, John,' says I, 'you forget that I am sick and have no appetite.' I was all ready to cry, but I was determined that he shouldn't have the satisfaction of seeing the tears fall.

"'Forget,' says he, 'forget? I wish to Heaven I could forget. It's nothing but grunt and groan from one year's end to the other. I have lost all patience with you,' says he. 'When we lived in part of a house, and you did your own housework, you were as well and happy as anybody, and no man ever had a pleasanter little home than John Stephens; but what have I now to leave or to come back to?' and this, doctor, is what he ended up with:

"'Kate,' says he, 'you are nothing more nor less than a drunkard, and, in the sight of God, more culpable than most of the men who stagger through the streets, because the majority of those poor devils have some sort of an excuse for their conduct, and you haven't the slightest. You have a luxurious home, a husband doing his level best to make you happy—everything under the light of the sun to please you, and yet you will persist in swilling tea.' Yes, doctor, swilling was the word he used—boo! hoo! hoo! O dear me! to think I should ever have lived to have heard such dreadful language out of my husband's mouth; and then he says, 'and making me as miserable a wretch as walks the earth.'"

"Pretty plain talk," interrupted the doctor, with a shrug of his broad shoulders.

"O, yes," sobbed the victim; "and so awfully coarse and unkind. If I had had a spell, and died there before his very face, I don't believe he would have cared a snap of his fingers. I tell you, Dr. Ellis, there is such a thing as a man's getting hardened."

"Evidently," replied the physician, with a laconicism absolutely painful.

"But my husband has nothing in the world to trouble him but just my poor health; and I am sure I can't help that." This remark was more in answer to her companion's tone and manner than the one single word that had accidentally escaped his lips, and this the doctor felt.

"Any body would think by the way he goes on," continued the irate woman, "that I enjoyed myself with spasms and cramps and fainting fits. Any body would think it was a pleasure to me to feel every time I see a funeral procession as if the hearse was going to stop at our door next. O, yes! such a life is very enjoyable, very, indeed."

Dr. Ellis took no notice of the last words; the man's eyes grew luminous, and his whole face declared that he considered himself master of the situation; and if Mrs. Stephens had not been so entirely taken up with her own ailments, mental and physical, that honest countenance would have betrayed him.

"You say," he began, settling himself in the large easy-chair, and assuming a strictly professional air, "that your husband has nothing to trouble him but your health; how do you know that Mrs. Stephens?"

"How? Why, how do I know anything? By the evidences of my senses. Don't I know that John Stephens has a splendid business that looks after itself, a magnificent income, and money enough to live on the bare interest, as well as a family need to live, if he never entered his office again while he has breath?"

"But money isn't everything, Mrs. Stephens," proceeded the physician, with a calmness almost Mephistophelean. "There are other troubles besides money troubles. How about health, madam?"

"Health?" repeated the lady, with a smile she intended to be sarcastic to the last degree. "Health? Dr. Ellis! Why, there isn't a healthier or sounder man than my husband in the United States. He eats more in one meal than I do in three months."

"There is nothing the matter with your husband's stomach, Mrs. Stephens." Dr. Ellis shaded his face with his hand, and waited further developments. Mrs. Stephens mistook this attempt at forced concealment for emotion, and immediately assuming a sitting posture, brushed her eyes, and looked piercingly into her companion's face.

"Why do you accent the word 'stomach' so strongly, Dr. Ellis?" she inquired, in anxious tones. Mrs. Stephens was forgetting herself, and this the doctor hailed as an excellent omen.

"Only that I might make you understand that a man's digestion could be most unexceptionable, and yet he be far from sound in other directions."

"Then you mean to tell me that my husband is sick?"

"I do."

"Perhaps you will go still further, and say dangerously?"

"If you desire it."

"O, Dr. Ellis, how cold and unfeeling you are! I should think you ought to know by this time—" and just here Mrs. Stephens broke down entirely, and sobbed as if her heart would break.

"Ought to know what, Mrs. Stephens?" inquired the doctor, with uncalled-for deliberation.

"You ought to know—to know—that my—my husband's health and life are of a good deal more consequence to me than my own."

"Ah, indeed," interrupted the physician, with an elevation of the bushy eyebrows, immensely suggestive of a contrary opinion, as well as several very excellent reasons for said opinion.

"Dr. Ellis, will you be kind enough to tell me what's the matter with my husband?"

Mrs. Stephens was now on her feet—tears all wiped away, eyes flashing with resentful spirits, and only the little quiver of her lip to show how deep a wound the kind heart in her bosom had sustained. There she stood, reproachful, defiant, determined, womanly. The doctor was delighted, and such an honest face it was that he carried round with him from door to door, from sunrise to sunset, every day in the year, that it was a mighty hard matter to keep it from an immediate betrayal of the whole purpose.

"Mrs. Stephens," said he, "you have no cause to be alarmed. If I can only get your co-operation in this business, I feel certain I shall be able to make a well man of your husband in a few months, at the longest; but, as true as I sit here before you, I cannot do this alone."

"Why have I not been informed of this before?" broke in Mrs. Stephens, imperiously.

"Who was there to inform you, madam? Your husband does not know his condition, and I should really like to be told when you have been sufficiently calm to hear all that was necessary for you to know."

"But, Dr. Ellis, I should think you ought to have understood that my own health and comfort are nothing, compared to my husband's." Mrs. Stephens was weeping again. "There is no sacrifice that I would not make for him."

"Curious creatures!" muttered the doctor; "delightful bundles of contradictions. How the mischief should I know, Mrs. Stephens, how much you care for your husband? I am sure you have spent the last hour complaining about him. Is that the way women generally testify their regard for their husbands?"

"Oh, don't, Dr. Ellis, please don't," pleaded the terrified woman. "I will never complain again—never—if you will only let me know what I can do for him. Do you know, doctor, I had begun to think lately that something must be amiss with him, he was growing so irritable. Poor dear! how wicked and thoughtless I have been."

"This, then, is the trouble. I shall take it for granted, madam, that you know something about physiology, and can follow me without difficulty?"

"O—yes, for mercy's sake, go on."

"Very well; I find that the pericardium—"

"The pericardium?" repeated Mrs. Stephens.

"You know what that is, I suppose?"

Evidently Mrs. Stephens' anatomical knowledge was limited. She shook her head in despair. "Something about the heart, is it not?" she asked, at last.

"Yes, the pericardium is the membraneous sac that holds the heart. Well, sometimes this sac—it is no matter about particulars, Mrs. Stephens," and Dr. Ellis suddenly came to a standstill.

"It is enough, though, for me to say that we are both passably anxious that his heart should remain where it belongs. Mr. Stephens must be amused. He wants the opera, the lecture, the social circle, entertaining books—a happy home—music. You play and sing, do you not, Mrs. Stephens?"

"O yes—I used to," and Mrs. Stephens' tones were so pitiful now that big Dr. Ellis really and truly was obliged to wipe both his eyes and his nose. Before he was aware, the lachrymal duet had gotten the upper hand.

"Well, try it again; get a teacher, and go to practicing."

"But how am I going to manage my spasms?" sobed the lady.

"Well, perhaps between us both—you using your will power, and thinking of your husband, going out with him, and taking care of him, and I doing my best in my way—we may be able to subdue them; but you must remember this, madam—do not let Mr. Stephens have the faintest suspicion that you think anything is the matter with him; and above all, do not treat him like an invalid. Just amuse him, and all that, you know, just as you used to when you were first married."

Another series of sobs from Mrs. Stephens.

The doctor arose to go. His patient had entirely forgotten that he had left no prescription.

"About tea, doctor?" she asked, as he prepared to leave. "Do you think it very hurtful?"

"As an occasional tonic, I have no objection to tea; but as a daily beverage, madam, it is an invention of the devil." Good-morning."

John Stephens sought his home that evening with a heavy heart. His wife he believed a confirmed invalid, or hypochondriac—it mattered little which; one was as bad as the other. His remonstrances were of no avail, he was doubtful even whether his wife loved him. He opened the door softly with his latch-key. This had become habitual; seldom did the gentleman show himself to his beloved wife until after the dining-bell had summoned the family to the dining-room.

A strain of music met and transfixed him on the very threshold. Abt's beautiful song was being rendered, and his wife was the musician. He was just in time to hear:

"The eyes that cannot weep
Are the saddest eyes of all."

For a full year this charming voice had been as silent as the grave.

"Company, perhaps," he muttered. Curiosity overcame him. He opened the parlor door and peeped in. There was Mrs. John Stephens, becomingly attired, all alone, as enthusiastic over the fine rendition of a piece of music as he had ever seen her.

"What does this mean, Kate?" he asked, with outstretched arms.

"That I have given up, and am going to try hard to be well. I guess my voice will all come back, John."

"I guess so," he replied, folding her tight to his heart.

Three months after this the cure was so radical that Dr. Ellis made a clean breast of the whole thing; and there is no word or set of words that can provoke so hearty a laugh in the happy home of the Stephens as this physiologically scientific one—Pericardium.

Authorship and Journalism.

If a poet, or aspiring author, must labor for the daily subsistence of a family, it is as well for his art that he should follow some other calling than journalism; for I can testify that after the day's work is over—when the brain is exhausted and vagrant, and the lungs pant for air, and body and soul cry for recreation—the intellect has done enough, and there is neither strength nor passion left for imaginative composition. I have known a writer who deliberately left the editorial profession, for which he was adapted both by taste and vocation, and took up a pursuit which bore no relation to letters; hoping that authorship would proffer him thenceforth the freshness of variety, that upon occasion of loss or trouble it might be his solace and recompense, and that, with a less-jaded brain, what writing he could accomplish would be of a more enduring kind. It is so true, however, that one nail drives out another! As an editor, this person was unable to do anything beyond newspaper work; as a business man, with not the soundest health, and with his heart, of course, not fully in his occupation, he found himself neither at ease in his means, nor able to gain sturdier hours for literature than vigorous journalist-authors filch from recreation and sleep. Fortunate in every way is the æsthetic writer who has sufficient income to support him altogether, or at least, when added to the stipend earned by first-class work, to enable him to follow art without harrassment. For want of such a recourse, poets, with their delicate temperaments, may struggle along from year to year, composing at intervals which other men devote to social enjoyment, rarely doing their best; possibly with masterpieces stifled in their brains till the creative period is ended; misjudged by those whom they most respect, and vexed with thoughts of what they could perform, if sacred common duties were not so incumbent upon them.—Edmund Stedman.

Tax on Bachelors.

A member of the French Assembly proposes to levy a tax on bachelors. They are to be compelled to pay eight dollars a head, and 35 is the age at which a disposition to confirmed celibacy may be considered settled. The revenue to be derived from this source is supposed to equal two millions of money. We do not know, of course, what may be the feelings of French bachelordom regarding this matter. They will probably retaliate by proposing a tax on babies. The most maligned class of persons in the world are undoubtedly bachelors and mothers-in-law, and the serious question is suggested: "If there were no mothers-in-law would there be any bachelors; or wouldn't every man be his own father? The United States, from its very name, is a conjugal country. And yet the eligible maidens sigh for fashions beyond the simple tastes of their grandmothers; the ineligible lament the frivolities of the giddy-headed; the divorce court is never idle; and things generally are mixed. It will not do to tax bachelors in this republic. Levy a tax on extravagant daughters and ambitious mammas, and bachelors will soon be as difficult to find as volunteers during a military draft.

THE public at large has probably no conception of the number of fishing vessels which are yearly lost, with their crews, on the various fishing banks outlying our coasts. According to the figures given by the Nautical Gazette, there were lost in forty-two years 1,265 lives and 280 craft of all sizes. The value of the property thus destroyed is estimated at $1,145,500. These are formidable statistics to contemplate. A very large proportion of these vessels were run down by steamers and large sailing ships during the prevalence of the dense fogs which are constant in these latitudes. The Nautical Gazette recommends the general introduction of fog horns sufficient in volume to be heard from one to three miles in bad weather.

AMONG the meanest and most contemptible of God's creatures the gossiper stands prominent and alone in his enormity. No wretch does more to destroy human happiness and propagate human misery than he. VINEGAR BITTERS commend themselves to the ailing and afflicted, as they are deficient in one thing alone, viz.: the stimulant that unduly excites the brain, and creates a morbid thirst for spirits! BROOKVILLE, Pa., April 27, 1872.

DR. R. V. PIERCE:

SIR—Having first applied to a number of home physicians and failed to get relief, I resolved to try your Remedy. Four bottles have completely cured me of one of the worst cases of Catarrh of which I have any knowledge, having suffered for months with an acute pain in the head, and breathed only with the greatest difficulty. I deem it due you as well as suffering humanity that this recognition be made of what we deem an invaluable medicine.

THE most stupendous enterprise on the continent for the relief of human woe is the National Surgical Institute of Indianapolis, Ind. It has a capital stock of $500,000, with over fifty surgeons, assistants, and instrument makers, who are constantly employed in giving relief to thousands of sufferers annually. WISHART'S

Nature's Great Remedy
FOR ALL
THROAT AND LUNG DISEASES!!

It is the vital principle of the Pine Tree, obtained by a peculiar process in the distillation of the tar, by which its highest medicinal properties are retained. Tar even in its crude state has been recommended by eminent physicians of every school. It is confidently offered to the afflicted for the following simple reasons:

1. IT CURES,—not by abruptly stopping the cough—but by dissolving the phlegm and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter causing the irritation. In cases of seated CONSUMPTION it both prolongs and renders less burdensome the life of the afflicted sufferer.

2. Its healing principle acts upon the irritated surface of the lungs, penetrating to each diseased part, relieving pain, and subduing inflammation.

3. IT PURIFIES AND ENRICHES THE BLOOD. Positively curing all humors, from the common PIMPLE or ERUPTION to the severest cases of Scrofula. Thousands of affidavits could be produced from those who have felt the beneficial effects of PINE TREE TAR CORDIAL, in the various diseases arising from IMPURITIES OF THE BLOOD.

4. It invigorates the digestive organs and restores the appetite.

Vanderbilt.

The wealth of the Vanderbilt family has been variously estimated, and the retinence of the Commodore himself has admitted of little else than mere conjecture on this point. There is a general opinion, howsver, among those who are in a position to judge most correctly that the wealth vested in Commodore Vanderbilt exceeds one hundred millions of dollars, and a prominent member of the family recently said that the "old man" was worth more than that sum. This vast fortune was acquired by Cornelius Vanderbilt through his own efforts, starting early in life without capital or influence. His parents were poor, and his first money was earned in conveying people to and fro in a row-boat between New York and Staten Island. He made a large amount of money in steamboating, but the great bulk of his wealth has been acquired in railroad combinations and in the manipulation of railroad stocks. He is and has been all his life a very remarkable man. His self-reliance and pluck are as natural with him as drawing breath, and his will and purpose indomitable. A man of such tremendous mental force has he been that he has moved forward to the accomplishment of his objects with a power as irresistible as one of his steamboats. His one purpose in life has been the acquisition of money. To this end he has trained his mental and physical resources with the greatest care. He has made of himself a machine that has always obeyed the requirements of his intellect, and wherever he has struck it has been with telling force and effect. He has had very few vices. He has always drank moderately and lived regularly, taking just the requisite amount of exercise always. Smoking and whist-playing are the only indulgencies which he has permitted himself to any considerable degree. Every day he is to be seen driving on the road, with the stump of a cigar between his teeth, and until within a year past he has had every evening some of his cronies in for a rubber at whist and to talk horse, a subject at which he never tires. Latterly, however, his evenings have been passed very quietly. He has always been a strict man of business, kept his own counsel, and admitted or known no partners. He never allows the plea of affection or charity to interfere with his business matters. Appeals to his sympathy have about as much effect as a straw forced under the wheels of a locomotive. He has been well, active, and in the harness all his life, and has never tired or weakened. He will be 80 years of age in May, and his 60 odd years of constant hard work show that he has had one of the strongest physical constitutions ever given to a man.—New York Graphic.

Working in Hot Atmospheres.

In relation to the subject of how high a temperature men can endure and work in, a writer in the British Journal of Science notes the following interesting cases: During the re-heating of furnaces in an iron-works in England, the men worked when the thermometer, placed so as not to be influenced by the radiation of heat from the open doors, marked 120 deg. In the Bessemer pits, 140 deg. was reached, and yet the men continued a kind of labor requiring great muscular effort. In some of the operations of glass-making, the ordinary summer working temperature is considerably over 100 deg.; and the radiant heat to which the workmen are subjected far exceeds 212 deg. In a Turkish bath the shampooers continue four or five hours at a time in a moist atmosphere at temperatures ranging from 105 deg. to 110 deg. A case is mentioned of a person in the same establishment working half an hour in a heat of 185 deg. In enamel factories, men work daily in a heat of over 300 deg. On the Red sea steamers, the temperature of the stokehole is 145 deg., and some men will labor there for half an hour without a drop of perspiration, while others are carried out fainting. These examples of continuous work at 110, 120, 140 and 145 degrees correspond to depths in mines of 3,650, 4,250, 5,450 and 5,750 feet. The author thinks, thrrefore, that the limit of 4,000 feet, fixed by the English commissioners as the extreme workable depths of mines, is too small, and he considers 8,000 feet as a safe boundary.

The sea along the coast of Brittany and Portugal abounds at certain seasons of the year, with a certain very small but extremely delicate fish, known as the sardine. These, cured by a peculiar process, put up in olive oil, and enclosed in small tin boxes, have long been exported to various parts of the world, and everywhere regarded as a luxury. A new enterprise has recently been started on the coast of New Jersey, that bids fair to furnish a substitute for this delicate little fish brought from the other side of the sea. A company has been formed for catching and putting up a small fish which abounds on the coast, but which heretofore has not been utilized to any great extent. This fish is the menhaden, "moss bunker," or ocean trout. It is a very timid fish, migratory in its habits, and moving in immense "schools." They move very near the surface of the water, and are caught by surrounding a portion of a "school" with a long net. The silly creatures do not know enough to dive beneath the net and escape. They are dipped from the water and taken on shore in boats, when they are scaled, cleaned, cured in salt, and then packed in tin boxes. Sometimes a thousand bushels are caught at a single haul. Last year this company put up nearly half a million boxes of these American sardines. This year, it is thought, a much larger business will be done.

"PUNCH" IN HIS GARDEN.—There was a great stir in our garden the other day. The potatoes were ready to jump out of their skins. The beet turned red to its very roots. The celery lost their heads and the cabbages their hearts. The peas split their pods with excitement. The asparagus could with difficulty be kept in its bed. The parsley curled itself up in a corner. The cucumber alone maintained its habitual coolness. The cause of all this commotion was the presence of a noted vegetarian. The potatoes never took their eyes off him.

WHEN is a match frivolous? When it makes light of things.

"The Durndest Knowingest Dog that Ever Wore Har."

He came in from Truckee Meadows yesterday, did that level-headed dog. He rode in by the side of his master on a load of potatoes. He was not a pretty dog, not a dog of blue blood and high degree. He was a tall, gaunt, shaggy-haired, wild-eyed looking brindle beast, of unrecorded pedigree. As the wagon, carrying man, dog and potatoes, halted for a time in front of a saloon in North C street, one of a party of half a dozen loungers thereabout made some remark in regard to the appearance of the canine, when thus spake ye horny handed, frowsy headed tiller of ye soil:

"Fellers, that air ain't a purty dog, I know—he's like me, makes no pretensions to natural beauty—but he's just the durndest knowingest dog that ever wor har. He's got more instinck, that dog has, an' more savey, an' pen'tration, an' insight into human natur', just in that ugly old cabez o' his, nor can be found in the heds of a whole plaza full of yer eddicated town dogs—poodles an' sich. What I pride in him for is his regular human sense; he's just the darndest dog out! Now ef I come home from town perfectly sober (when I've left him to see after the ranch) it would jist do your hearts good to see that dog show off what a sense of appreciation he's got of me. Fellers, his gorgeous tail stands aloft; he skyugles about; he runs on afore me a scrapin' up the yearth with his hind feet, sendin' the chips a flyin'; he holds up his head and barks in a cheerful an' manly tone o' voice, escortin' me forward, an' feelin' prouder'n if he'd holed a woodchuck! But let me come home full of tangle-leg, sheep-herder's delight and terrantiler juice, and this is the darndest shamedest dog yer ever saw. He jist takes one look at me an' he knows it all. Down goes his tail, he lops his years, hangs his head, squats his back, an' lookin' back now an' then, he slinks off an' crawls under the barn—actually ashamed to be seen about the premises for fear somebody will find out that I own him. I tell you, fellers, he's the cussedest dog for right out human sense that ever was seed in these parts, and Truckee Medders is proud that he war pupped thar!"—Virginia (Nev.) Enterprise.

Equinoctial Storms.

There is a popular delusion that a three-days storm is inevitable when the sun crosses the line in the latter part of March and September, and the unsettled state of the weather at this period, which usually culminates in showers of some duration, is always spoken of as "the equinoctial storm."

According to Prof. Loomis, of Yale College, however, the equinox has very little to do with storms, and, excepting that the weather is generally unsettled by the changes which are taking place in the atmosphere, there is no more likelihood of a storm upon the day that sun crosses the line than upon any other of the year.

So much for one of the popular theories, which, like our popular superstitions, obtain a stronger hold upon the public mind than the strongest facts. In the light of this truth, it is not difficult to account for the length of time, centuries perhaps, which it takes to discover a popular error or establish a scientific truth; nor can we measure our indebtedness to those men who devote their lives to discovering facts in nature and art, and establishing them upon a scientific—that is, a real and knowable—basis. For it must be remembered that these men are always in a minority; the mass of mankind are content to take the world as they find it, with all its errors, all its superstitions, all its prejudices, and feel no gratitude to those who disturb their fond and foolish belief in them.

From the Shadow of the Guillotine.

One of the most remarkable escapes ever made was made by M. de Chateaubrun during the reign of terror in Paris. He was sent to execution with twenty other prisoners; but after the fifteenth head had fallen the guillotine got out of order, and a workman was sent for to repair it. The six remaining victims were left standing in front of the machine with their hands tied behind them. A French crowd is very curious, and the people kept pressing forward to see the man arranging the guillotine. By degrees M. de Chateaubrun, who was to the rear of his companions, found himself in the front line of the spectators, then in the second, and finally well behind those who had come to see his head cut off. Before the man could get the guillotine in working order night began to fall, and M. de Chateaubrun slipped away. When in the Champs Elysees he told a man that a wag had tied his hands and robbed him of his hat, and this simple individual cut him free. A few days later M. de Chateaubrun escaped from France.

THERE is much excitement in the neighborhood of Stonington, Conn., where one infirm son of Mr. Langworthy was killed and the other fatally hurt by assassins during the absence of the parents at church, on Sunday evening. The man servant, who was arrested for the crime, was seriously injured in the fray himself, and says he was knocked senseless at the time young Langworthy was killed. The marks upon his head show evidence of having been made by the same instrument that dealt the deadly blows to the young men. Suspicion is expressed that the father of the victims was at the bottom of the affair. He attended to his pursuit as a milk-peddler the morning after the murder, and does not show by his acts that he is terribly cast down by the event. It is said that the young men were below par intellectually and physically, and that their lives were insured for large amounts. This is the substance of the gossip afloat in the neighborhood.

HIS TIME.—Said a member of the Mississippi Legislature: "Mr. Speaker! Mr. Speaker! Mister Speaker! Ain't I 'titled to de flo', sah? I got up, sah, next after Mr. Smith, who was next after Mr. Johnson, who was next after Mr. Brown, who came next to Mr. Burrus, who was next to Mr. Bates, who was next to Mr. Ball, who was next to Mr. Blue, who was next to Mr. Barclay, sah, and have stood here until they all got through turnabout, and now it's my time."

Useful Suggestions.

CABBAGE leaves will cure the worst ulcer. So says a French journal.

TO PRESERVE FLOWERS FRESH.—A vase of flowers can be retained in freshness much longer by using soapsuds or soaped water—try it.

A GOOD INK.—Take bichromate of potassa one part, and extract of logwood three parts; add water, bring it to a boil, and it is ready for use. In the winter it must not freeze, though if it does, boil it again and it will be ready for use again.

FOR gravel in horses give two-thirds of a tablespoonful of saltpeter in a little salt for three consecutive days; or take a pint of watermelon seed and boil in two quarts of water till reduced to nearly one-half, and drench two mornings in succession. Your horses will be cured.

LINEN that is placed immediately after being ironed near the stove or in the hot sun is stiffer when dry than if it is permitted to dry slowly. It is a good plan to lay collars and small articles on a dry waiter and set them on a kettle or other support on the stove till they are quite dry. A bowl of clear water and a clean old linen cloth are useful to remove any specks the linen may acquire before or while being ironed.

TAKING INK OUT OF LINEN.—Melt pure tallow and cover the ink spot with it while hot. After washing in the usual manner, the stain will generally be gone. If, however, some of the blemish remains, a second application of this simple process will effectually remove it, and without injuring the linen. This method has been found to be decidedly the best among many others employed for the purpose mentioned by a laundry company of great celebrity in New York.

THE following mixture will make a very good barometer, it being very sensive to weather changes: Mix one and one-half drachms of camphor, dissolved in ten drachms of alcohol, with forty grains of saltpeter and forty grains of sal ammoniac to nine drachms of water. This mixture should be placed in a four ounce vial with a piece of cloth tied over its mouth, and placed in a good light, out of the sunshine, where it can be observed without handling. When the weather is fine the fluid is clear, but on the least change the chemicals rise from the bottom in beautiful crystals.

TO RENDER posts or timber, placed in the ground, practically impervious to moisture, and for a long time prevent decay, the following simple recipe has been tried and found to answer the purpose excellently. For fence and gate posts it is particularly recommended: Take linseed oil, boil it, and mix it with charcoal dust until the mixture has the consistency of an ordinary paint. Give to the posts a single coat of the mixture or paint before planting them, and no farmer, says one who has tried it, living to the age of the patriarchs of old, will live long enough to see the same posts rotten. The posts or timber should be well seasoned and dry when the paint is applied.

THE time-worn anecdote of a person's being so deceived by a theatrical representation as to believe it to be a scene of actual life was verified at one of the New York theaters the other night. In the play, which portrayed the life of a drunkard, the chief actor, when in great destitution, exclaims: "Alas, alas! no one in this wide world will give me even a crust of bread to eat." These words had hardly been pronounced by the actor before the audience saw a tall man arise in the parquet, who, in a voice trembling with emotion, said: "Gentlemen, I am a poor man, but I will give that man a dollar."

Ayer's Hair Vigor,
FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR
To its Natural Vitality and Color.

Advancing years, sickness, care, disappointment and hereditary predisposition, all turn the hair gray, and either of them incline it to shed prematurely.

AYER'S HAIR VIGOR, by long and extensive use, has proven that it stops the falling of the hair immediately; often renews the growth, and always surely restores its color, when faded or gray. It stimulates the nutritive organs to healthy activity, and preserves both the hair and its beauty. Thus brashy, weak or sickly hair becomes glossy, pliable and strengthened; lost hair regrows with lively expression; falling hair is checked and stablished; thin hair thickens and faded or gray hairs resume their original color. Its operation is sure and harmless. It cures dandruff, heals all humors, and keeps the scalp cool, clean and soft—under which conditions, diseases of the scalp are impossible.

As a dressing for ladies' hair, the VIGOR is praised for its grateful and agreeable perfume, and valued for the soft lustre and richness of tone it imparts.

Mr. Metcalf having removed from the county Mr. Brumback is appointed from his township.

T. C. MAYS, Chairman,

Why is it? We don't hear anything of late in the Radical papers about the death of the Democratic party Is it because the funeral in their own family is engrossing their entire attention? It would seem so.

Senator Morton did not appear in in the Senate the other day when the Presiden's veto was under consideration. His absence is explained upon the ground that he is not yet ready for a rupture with the President, and all his tact as a partisan is being used to hold the remnants of his party together for another campaign.

The St. Louis Democrat offers the following: "A conundrum we have not yet seen answered by the collaptionists: If it was right to issue a large porition of the reserve last September, because the New York banks needed the currency, why is it a crying sin, involving national dishonor, repudiation, etc., to issue the remainder now, to meet the wants of the farmers and laboring men of the country?'

Mr. Beecher said a sensible thin the other Sunday evening. American women, so he told his auditors, before everything else to reform their tables, and, instead of the indigestible stuff which they put upon them, prepare enjoyable and nutritious meals, Mr. Beecher is entirely right in this obobservation. There is no other civilized conutry in the world in the world in which the cooking is habitually and systemenatically so bad as in the United States.

Sumner was turned out of the republican party and his place at the head of the committee on Foreign Relations, because he differed with the President on the annexation of San Domingo. This was done through a caucus of republican members. The question now is, will a republican caucus turn Morton and his brother inflationists out of the party for differing with the President about further inslation of the currency and actually voting against his veto of the measure? Greely, Sumner, Schurz, Trumbull, and a host of others were set adrift by the party leaders for differing with the administration as to the policy of covering up public defalcations, bribery and robbery. North and South, and now here is a spectacle where a majority of these very chief henchmen of Grant are turning upon him with the ferocity of wild beasts What shall be done with them?

Three hundred thousand men in South Carolina who are borne down by taxation, whose rights are usurped, whose lands are despoiled, who are suffering untold oppression, ask Congress simply that inquiry be made into their wrongs. Amajority of the Judiciary committee refuse this request. The minority report, submitted on Wednesday by Mr. Eldridge, recommends the appointment of a Committee of both Houses of Congress, with power to go to South Carolina and inquire into the conditions of her people. "It is impossible," says the minority report, "to turn a deaf ear to the supplicating wail of three hundred thousand oppressed and despoiled citizens of that once prosperous and happy State, praying only that inquiry be made into their alleged wrong." We shall see whether Congress can hear.

The Centennial job got a squelcher in the House last week. It was only $3,000,000 the Philadelphia patriots wanted for the big show in 1676.

The farmer's' movement is taking definite form in Illinois. The Advisory Board of the State Farmers' Association have called a convention to be composed of Workingmen of all kinds, to meet at Springfield on the 10th of Sune next. It is the intention to nominate candidates for State Treasurer and Superintendent of Public Instruction. One great danger besets conventions of this kind; the probability that they will be gobbled by a unscrupulous and wily politicians. If this danger can be avoided, there is indeed a good prospect that something will be done in Illinois. It will be unfortunate for the movement if some pronounced action be taken at the forthcoming convention.

The Indianapolis Journal waxes fearfully wroth over a cartoon in a late number of Harper's Weekly, in which the saintly Nast expressed his ideas of the late bill for the inflation of the currency by representing Morton, Logan, Cameron and Carpenter as bullies and plunderers making a raid on the President. The Journal grows eloquently indignant over what it terms this "most infamous and brutal caricature." In high dudgeon it says: "Senator Morton is made to appear like a drunken ruffian, with open shirt collar, pantaloons tucked in his boots, a heavy bludgeon in his hand, and in all respects the picture of a bully and cutthroat. * * * Harper's Weekly sees fit to do this because Senator Morton has argued in the Senate in favor of an increase of currency. * * This is the Eastean idea of wit and decency, this brutal treatment of distinguished men. * * The cartoon is simply disgraceful and degrading, and the sections of the country it outrages and insults should see to it that the concern publishing it is made to suffer for its insolence and brutality."

And this is all because the "Journa of Civilization" treads on the toes of Morton & Co. The Indianapolis Journal seems to forget that "infamous and brutal caricatures" are no new thing for Harper's Weekly to indulge in, and it forgets, too, that when such men as Greeley and Schurz were brutally caricatured the Indianapolis Journal was one of the first new papers of the country to encourage and flatter Th. Nast for his "insolance and brutality." It is a chicken, Mr Journal that was raised in your neighborhood and it has only come home to roost.

Crop Prospects.

Although the condition of Western farmers is not as easy as could be wished, on account of the general disappearance of the money they received for last year's crop it is not without causes for encouragement. We do not recall a spring in a period of a dozen years that gave a more cheerful promise of abundance than the present. It is too early to make any predictions about the unplanted corn crop, but we are able to make conjectures about the fruit, the growing wheat and the condition of the meadows, and they are of the most satisfactory character. The season is backward, but this, perhaps, is more of a blessing than a disadvantage, for it has kept the fruit buds from blooming till the present time, and thus saved them from the cold winds and sleets last month. Our accounts from nearly all quarters of the West represent the fruit of all kinds as uninjured, or but slightly injured, and now beyond reasonable danger of injury; and the prospects is that we shall have peaches, cherries, pears and apples in abundance. The farmers in those counties of this state and Illinois where orchards are cultivated for market purposes, are calculating confidently on a large fruit yield to bring them a supply of money in advance of the field crops. The growing wheat from all accounts, never looked better in this State, and is nearly as promising in Illinois. In many places it is more than knee high, and on the uplands unusually green, thick and vigorous, with a few of those bare patches that a severe winter makes in the fields. It is not out of the way to say that Missouri will yield a third more wheat this year than it did last. The oats crop has been generally put in, and promises well. The profuse spring rains have been of great benefit to the meadows; the grass is thick and close on the surface, and the hay yield of the west, one of the most important and saleable of crops, ought to be unusually fine. The whole prostpect of farmers is most flattering, and if they would look less to an unproductive Congress sitting at Washington City, and more to their own fertile fields for the supply of currency they need, they would encounter less disappointment. If Congress were to vote the issue of a thousand millions of additional greenbacks, a Western farmer would not get a single dollar of it, except by buying it, either with produce or a mortgage on his farm: whereas, if he relies on his well worked fields to bring him a supply of money next fall, without borrowing, he will be gratified.—St. Louis Republican.

Pioneer Sketches

—OF—

DeKALB COUNTY

NUMBER ELEVEN.

So in process of time nearly every settler had a family handmill, made according to the following receipt, viz: Take a sound log of some hard wood, such as beech or sugar, about twenty inches in diameter. Saw it off, about three feet in length. Set on end, and, with an inch augur, commence boring down, diagonally into the upper end, from near the circumference to the center of the log and continue until you have surrounded the end of the log with augur holes meeting in the center. Take a chisel and cut down between the holes until you get the block loose, that has thus been bored under, and it comes out in the form of an inverted cone. Trim out the funnel shaped hole thus left with a chisel as well as you can, and then to make entirely smooth and to harden it, build a fire of coals therein. When sufficiently burned for the purpose mentioned, take out the fire and scrape the coals off cleanly as possible, and you have a large mortar Now take a stick about as thick as your rist, and two and a half feet long, and splitting one end, insert an iron wedge with its edge in the split. Put on an iron ring and drive it over the iron wedge, so as to hold it fast. Trim off the stick small enough to handle convenienly and you have a pestle. Now you may put a little corn in your morter, and beat it with your pestle as fine as you can. Sift out the finest, and you have corn meal. Blow the bran out of the balance, and you have "hominy."

It is much to the credit of the pioneers of our county, that amidst all the difficulties of the early settlements, they did not neglect the education of their children. I know settlements in the south part of this state, that had existed twenty years, without a school house. Not so in this county. No sooner had a few settlers got their cabins raised and fixed so that they could live in them, they raised their school house—rough and uncomfortable it is true, but on an equality with their residences. They were of round logs with clapboard roofs, chamber floor and door also of clapboards. Ground floor of puncheon; benches of the same, or, rather, generally of small logs split in two, and turned with the flat side up, and with rough wooden pins driven into augar holes for "legs"—chimney of sticks and mud built as described in a former chapter, but generally larger than the chimneys of private residences, so that twenty or twenty-five children might surround it in a semicircle, while a burning "log heap" flamed on the hearth in the winter, or to get light from its ample throat in the summer.

The windows generally were made by cutting out a log nearly the whole length of the house, leaving a hole—say a foot wide and eighteen or twenty feet long. Into this a long sash was inserted, consisting of single panes, joined together horizontally, until the long hole was filled In some cases that come under my notice, however, this long hole was filled with a kind of latice work of sticks, and upon this greased paper was pasted to transmit the light. Under this long window, large holes were bored into the log, rough wooden pins driven into these holes, and an unplaned laid on these pins. This was the writing desk. The writers sat on a long legged bench, facing this plank and the window, and if thep were many, they prevented the light of the window, especially on a cloudy day, from reaching many scholars, sitting back from it, but on such occasions they drew near to the huge tunnel of the chimney, and were "enlightened."

In just such school houses, I tought several schools in an early day, and expritenced the truth of Thompson's couplet.

> "Delightful task! to rear the tender though,
> And teach young the ideas how to shoot"

Will you allow me to enliven this prosy chapter with another anecdote?

Well, a New York dandy better acquainted with books and pavements than with "backwoods" life or character, concluded to visit the west and see "the natives." As he was riding along on a cold day in the winter, when sleighing was good in his fine sleigh, wrapped up in his "buffalo," with his great coat on, his fur cap tied down over his ears, and his fur gloves up his elbows—he passed one of these frontier schoolhouses. It was "recess," and the teacher an some of the bigger boys were out at the side of the side of the school house knocking some squirrels off a tall hickory tree with a rifle. The dandy reined up his horse a few minutes, and as he saw the squirrels drop one after another, perpetrated the following parody on the above oft quoted couplet of Thompson:

> "Delightful task! to rest the tender thought,
> And teach the youthful Indians how toshoot."

The rascal! It was well for him I was not there to hear him.

Senator Washburn has made his debut. He called up a bill, introduced at the beginning of the session by his lamented predecessor favoring the settlement of international disputes by arbitration. That was not a bad beginning for the new Senator.

"If I had but a thousand a year, Gafford Green; If I had but a thousand a year, I'd buy Vordermark's boots and shoes, Gafford Green, if I had a thousand a year." It is not necessary, however to have a thousand a year to buy goods of the Vordermarks, for they sell the best kinds of boots and shoes at such low figures that any one can afford to buy of them.

The march of improvement. That great philanthropis and public benefactor Edward Baker has barricaded the banks of the river with logs, chunks and other rubbish so that the farmers who are driving to town with teams warm and thirsty cannot drive them through the creek. If the antidiluvian would take half the pains in behalf of the improvement that he does to retard it, his room might not be better than his company.

As next Sabbath is the beginning of a new year of labor with the Presbyterian church of Auburn, I will preach an anniversary sermon; and as it is our communion Sabbath, we heartily and cordially invite all who can to come and be glad with us.

J. Emory Fisher.

The editor left last Tuesday to join the State Editorial Association at Indianapolis, in excursion from there to Washington, Bull Run, Fair Oaks, and Richmond battle grounds, Mt. Vernon, Baltimore, New York, Philadelphia, Harrisburg, Pittsburg, Cleveland and thence home. He will be absent about two weeks.

A young man by the name of Charles Anthrupt was seriously injured last week by the falling of a stick of timber while in the act of raising it up. He was employed by Hugh Watt on the old Sprott farm about two miles north-west of Auburn. He is as sensible as he ever was, although the skull bone is broken in several places. Hopes are entertained of his recovery.

Sad Suicide—An old lady aged 72 yrs, mother of Orid Clark, Esq., living near Hopewell Chapel a few miles south-west of here, cut her throat last Monday morning with a common pocket knife, and at last accounts, cannot possibly live. She had been considered insane for some time None of her relatives had any indication that she would attempt suicide.

Turn Out.—On next Sabbath evening the scholars of the Methodist Sunday School will give a concert. They have been to considerable trouble and we think they ought to recieve a large patronage. Heretofore on these occasions the audience was "slim" and of course this gave little energy to those who took part in the exercises. Country boys should get their "dulcian" by the wing, bring your whips, cushions, &c in the pew with you and help fill up the vacant seats. Those in town who were never seen inside of a church should bring their family and dogs. Remember the concert is free.

Dogs—If there is one luxury that Auburn indulges in more than another it is dogs. There is one destructive feature about these creatures in this locality that a wide observation has failed yet to detect elsewhere, and that is, they are longer and louder made, and have the bottom every time. There are one or two families in town that have no dog, as yet, but there are several other ones that have two or more so that the average will hold out. We hope a few more will be imported—there is nothing that advertises a town so well as dogs.

Spencerville Items—The steam mills of Peter Bowman came near being destroyed by fire on last Friday. By prompt assistance from our citizens the flames were subdued before any serious damage was done.

Elijah Dilly, a respected farmer in this community, has recently engaged in the millinery business, with Mrs Susan Ayers as partner. All right Lij. Pass the cake 'round

These fine days cause the click of the of the corn planter to be heard, making music to the tread of many grengers.

A letter from Bro. Sandoe, now at west Lodi, Ohio, informs us that he has arrived at his new field of labor, and is greatly encouraged at his reception. He says, "We met a few of our parishoners at the door to welcome us, and when they left we found an abundance of substantials of life, such as ham, beef, etc., and what most preachers like, chickens. They gave me a horse and we are comfortably situated. Our charge consists of two congregations five miles apart. Wheat and clover looks well. Weather is fine and warm and I feel like the spring fever.—There are prospects for a fine fruit harvest.

Sad, if True.—Suspicions as to the taking off of one of our young men, have been gently whispered about of late, though there is, as yet, no good grounds to justify them. A few months ago he left this place, and since then nothing has been heard of him. His father has expressed himself in the belief that he has shuffled off this mortal coil, and almost treats it as a matter of fact. The son was somewhat disipated and reckless, but not a bad fellow after all, and were it not for the curse of intemperance would make a smart and industrious young man. We trust that the fears entertained are unfounded and Will will turn up one of these days a wiser and a better man.

Bro Boyle then moved that the code of by-laws reported by the committee be adopted, which motion prevailed.

Bro Boyle moved that the council now elect a county purchasing agent which motion prevailed, and no dinations were made.

On motion of Bro Tomlinson the vote on the adoption of the last preceeding motion to re consider and said motion withdrawn.

Bro Lessig moved to re-consider the vote on the adoption of Bro Boyle's motion to elect agents. Motion prevailed, and was withdrawn

Bro Waterman then moved that the chair appoint a committee of three to select and employ on the best terms possible a purchasing agent for this council which motion prevailed, but at the request of the President the council proceeded to elect said committee, and Bros Shoemaker, Reed and Moore were chosen

Court Proceedings.—Court convened Monday. There is a large docket with some important cases, a goodly number of foreign attorneys, among them we notice Judge Morris, Messrs. Baker & Mitchell, W. B McConnell our enterprising prosecuting attorney, Judge Studabaker of Decatur and Mr. Stahl of Fort Wayne.

On Tuesday Messrs Baker & Mitchell moved to dissolve the injunction in the case of H. S. Iddings against S. G. Wise.

There is but little business for the Grand Jury. They will probably adjourn to-day.

Owners of mills, factories &c., that use steam whistles are not aware perhaps that by the decision of some courts, if a team is frightened an injury results by reason of the blowing of a steam whistle, that the company is liable in law for damages. It is upon this theory that Mr. Jackson sues the Auburn Manufacturing Company for upwards of $10,000,00.

Criminal business light, only two cases, those against Strebe and Mansderfer. will be tried.

The Anderson Bros. gave an entertainment last Friday and Saturday at Ensly's Hall.

Salt Pickles 7cts per doz., Sour 15cts per doz., at Beard's.

If you have feet like a pair of twin aligators, of course you can't help it, neither can Vordermark & Son, but they have a new hand made last that will fit a boot to your foot in spite of the very —— foot.

Tommy Leasure will open his ice-cream parlors next week. He has purchased the necessary materials for making the above, and Tom knows how to "dish her up" in grand style. Call and see him over Snyder's hardware store.

The Anatomical and Pedeological lasts, just received at Vordermark & Son's These are a hand made last and made the shape of the foot, you can get a genuine fit, no matter what shape your 'hoofs' are in. They are a sure cure for corns.

TO THE DELINQUENT TAX PAYERS OF DeKALB CO. IND.

Be it known that the delinquent list from the taxduplicate of 1873, is now in my hands for collection and will pass into the hands of my deputies on Monday the 15th day of June 1874, until then taxes may be settled at the Treasurer's office with the simple penalty of ten per centum and interest added. Afterward there will be other costs and charges added, whether payment be made to the collector in person, or to the Treasurer. There will be further charges in case of collections by sale of goods and chattels, and the legal fees for posting notices. Bear in mind that no tax can be settled without the lawful fees after reaching the deputies hands, and no Treasurer or Deputy, dare accept the fees without the tax. In compliance with the late law of the State of Indiana the deputy collectors will be compelled to enforce payment at once upon receipt of the lists. The new law further provides that the deputies as well as the Treasurer, have the power at all times to levy on the personal property of delinquents, wherever such may be found, to satisfy both land and chattel tax. The law provides that when property fails to sell where first offered, it may be removed to some other township, and again exposed to sale. Deputies will be responsible under bond and oath for the return of every dollar collectable by law. The new law compels Treasurers to collect the tax of delinquents where there is personal property that he can levy on to make such tax if he fail to make such tax when it can be done in this manner, he will have to pay the whole amount himself at his settlement with the Auditor of his county. Now let me kindly urge each delinquent tax payer to avail himself of this timely notice and call and settle his tax account before the 15th day of June 1874 as the Treasurers are bound under the new law to show no favors to any one.

Very respectfully your obedient servant,
NICHOLAS ENSLEY, Treasurer.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

Ernest Love, the supposed author of the atrocious quintuple murder at Homestead, Pa., is a young, stout, hearty German, some 20 or 25 years of age, not long in the country, and had been in the employ of the Hammetts for some four months. Nothing calculated to fasten suspicion upon this man had taken place previous to this awful occurrence, and only recently, during the visit on the part of John Hammett to a neighbor, the former had expressed his satisfaction at having in his employ so sober, industrious and honest a lad....Joe Waltz, a murderer, sentenced to be hanged at Catskill, N. Y., killed his keeper, Charles Ernst, in his cell on the 30th ult., by striking him on the head with a piece of iron, smashing in his skull.

Joseph Waltz was hung at Catskill, N. Y., on the 1st inst. Waltz was one of the most depraved wretches that ever dangled from the end of a rope. He confessed to the murder of three men, and on the day before his execution added another to the list by brutally slaying his keeper, from whom he had received the kindest treatment.

The village of Shawangunk, N. Y., on the Walkill Valley railroad, was the scene of a terrible calamity, resulting in the death of eight or ten persons, on the 3d of May. As the day hands employed in Condit's large paper-mill were leaving the shop, just before 6 o'clock in the evening, the large rotary boiler exploded, nearly demolishing the building and burying in the ruins many of the laborers. Seven of them were taken out dead, and three fatally wounded. The killed were horribly mangled, as the force of the explosion was terrific. ..The trade societies in New York city, in convention the other day, resolved to resist any attempt of the employers to make ten hours, instead of eight, a day's work.

Serious charges of fraud and corruption are made against the Reform Commissioners of Charities and Correction of New York City.

The West.

The Straits of Mackinaw are free from ice the lower fleet having passed up on the 30th ult.

On the night of April 27 the house of William Thatcher, of Princeton, Ind., was robbed of a package containing $15,000. No clue to the robbers or money has been had since, until, a few mornings ago, Thatcher found the same package, with all the money, lying on the sidewalk in front of his house. ....Four Missourians, while en route to Texas, lately quarreled, while encamped in the Indian Nation, about the ownership of a wagon and horses, and one of them was killed and two mortally wounded, the fourth escaping with slight injuries.

Eighty-one students of the Michigan University at Ann Arbor have been suspended for hazing and general insubordination.

All the saloons in Ann Arbor, Mich., have closed. There was no crusade in the meaning of the term elsewhere, but the law has been so vigorously enforced that the owners declare they cannot longer bear up against it. They advertise their places for sale.

The South.

The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South assembled at Louisville, Ky., on the 1st inst. About 200 delegates, representing every Southern State except Virginia, were in attendance, including all of the six Bishops. The Rev. Dr. Paine, as senior Bishop, presided. Dr. T. O. Summers, of Nashville, was re-elected Secretary.

A shocking story of inhuman barbarity comes from Howard county, Md. Two negro men scarred and branded the limbs of a colored boy with a red-hot iron, and afterward saturated his body with spirits of turpentine and set him on fire. His back and legs were roasted to a crisp, and at last accounts he was not expected to recover. The fiends who committed the deed have been arrested....The execution of Ann Hunt for the poisoning of Eliza Brawner took place at Elberton, Ga., on the 2d of May....The quadrennial exhibit of the Southern Methodist Publishing House, presented to the General Conference at Louisville, says the credit of the house is excellent, its affairs in a prosperous condition, and its capital largely increased in the last four years. A difference of $125,684.66 in favor of the house is reported for the past four years. It has now a capital of $314,037 over and above all liabilities.

Considerable excitement exists in Memphis on account of the refusal of the City Council to donate aid to the sufferers from the overflow. The Appeal of that city says: "Anything more discreditable to us, anything more disgraceful, anything so little and contemptible, has never yet blurred and blotted the official record of our city. We hang our heads for very shame, and take refuge behind our liberal-hearted business men, our merchants, our policemen, and firemen, whose labors in behalf of the immediate sufferers alone relieve us of the indelible disgrace."

A New Orleans dispatch of May 5 says: "There is no abatement of the crevasse overflow. The Relief Committee report officially to the Governor that up to date they have been distributing 40,000 rations a day, and that in their judgment, 50,000 rations daily for sixty days will be required to relieve the pressing wants."

An appeal has been published for the urgent relief of sufferers by the floods in the Southern States, which says that over 142,000 people have been driven from their homes, and are now without food or shelter, and that to furnish these with provisions alone will cost $25,000 a day....A representative convention of all the cotton exchanges in the United States has been called by the New Orleans Exchange, with a view to forming an organization for the collection of statistics, the interchange of opinion on questions of interest to the trade, and the promotion of social intercourse between members....An interesting bill relating to the development of fruit and nut culture in the South is now before Congress. It provides that where nut-bearing trees are planted and cultivated for five years, patents shall be issued to the extent of forty acres to each occupant; and where orange and lemon trees are cultivated for three years on five acres of land, patents shall be issued for forty acres.

Washington.

The consideration of a private bill involving a patent extension in the House, a few days ago, developed the existence in that body of a strong opposition to extending patents applying to sewing-machines supposed to be owned by any of the sewing-machine companies.... The report of the Ways and Means Committee on the Sanborn business has been submitted to the House of Representatives. It is a concise document, traversing the evidence adduced, and presenting the conclusions reached by the committee. The law authorized the appointment of three persons to assist the Internal Revenue officials in collecting delinquent taxes. The committee find that this provision has been exactly reversed, i. e., that the Internal Revenue Department has been appointed to assist certain persons to whom collection contracts were awarded. Secretary Richardson, Assistant-Secretary Sawyer, and Solicitor Banfield are "severely condemned" by the committee for inefficiency and carelessness; at the same time, they are acquitted of dishonest intentions by a saving clause. The committee further report that a large part, if not all, of the claims collected by Sanborn ought not to have been made the subject of a contract; they might, and probably would, have been collected by the regularly-employed servants of the Government. The recommendations subjoined to the report are: (1) That the law authorizing the contracts be repealed; (2) that all further claims under it be excluded from the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims.

A Washington telegram of the 5th inst. says the Senate Finance Committee has taken further action on the House Currency bill, and, by a majority vote, agreed to recommend the incorporation in it of the following provisions: The maximum greenback circulation to be $382,000,000. New national bank notes to be issued to the amount of $164,000,000, provided that, for each million of such new notes issued, there shall be $500,000 greenbacks retired until the total greenback circulation shall have been reduced to $300,000,000. The committee voted to fix Jan. 1, 1877, as the date at which specie payment should be resumed....A Washington dispatch of May 6 says: "There is not much doubt that the President has the name of Elihu B. Washburne, of Illinois, under serious consideration for Secretary of the Treasury, in place of Richardson, who will have to retire."....The Senate has confirmed the nomination of Samuel Burdett, of Missouri, as Commissioner of the General Land Office, to take effect June 1.

The House has discovered that the public business is very backward, and a resolution has been adopted fixing 11 o'clock in the forenoon as the hour for meeting in the future. It is expected that Congress will not be able to adjourn before the middle of July.

Political.

Ex-President Johnson, after a long retirement, has again appeared on the political stage. He is now on a visit to Nashville, and is credited with a desire to represent the State in the United States Senate....The managers of the impeachment trial of State Treasurer Hayes, of Kansas, held a meeting recently at Topeka, at which counsel for Hayes presented his resignation, and desired that proceedings be stopped....Both houses of the Texas Legislature have adopted resolutions instructing their Senators and Representatives in Congress to support Tom Scott's Texas Pacific Railroad bill.

Samuel J. Tilden is the prospective Democratic candidate for Governor of New York.

The Advisory Council of the Illinois Farmers' Association, consisting of the executive officers of county organizations, met at Bloomington on the 5th inst. After considerable discussion it was determined that the farmers' organization in Illinois enter the political arena the coming fall, and nominate candidates for the several offices, State and Congressional. To this end a State Convention has been called, to meet at Springfield on the 10th of June.

General.

The balance in cash in the Michigan State Treasury, but March 31, was $1,212,558.90. The receipts for April were $178,916.48. The payments for the same time were $79,283.44; leaving the balance in the Treasury, $1,311,991.94....The women crusaders have at last got down to work at La Salle, Ill. They began April 30 circulating a citizens' pledge and a petition to the Common Council of the city of La Salle. An important item, in this connection, is the heading of the petition by Rev. Father Anthony and his two assistants, of St. Patrick's Catholic Church. ....At Ripon, Wis., liquor-dealers are being prosecuted for violations of the Sunday and liquor laws....Forty liquor licenses have been taken out under the $150 rule, by saloon-keepers of Oshkosh, Wis.; fully 60 more announce their intention to come to the scratch. A few of the smaller beer-halls will be closed....The wholesale liquor-dealers of San Francisco, Cal., have perfected their organization for the purpose of protecting their customers in the interior from the crusaders, and the operative local opposition will raise a very large fund to defray the expenses of fighting both in the courts.

German bondholders in American railroads have sent over to this country to protect their interests a Mr. Osterberg, editor of a newspaper published at Frankfort-on-the-Main. Mr. Osterberg's clients are specially concerned in the Rockford, Rock Island and St. Louis railroad. This road has a bonded debt of $9,000,000, of which all but $225,000 is held in Germany....In the matter of the long-pending controversy as to whether Omaha, on the Nebraska side, or Council Bluffs, on the Iowa side of the Missouri river, is legally the Eastern terminus of the Union Pacific railroad, the House Committee on the Pacific railroad, in Congress, has reported in favor of the claim of Council Bluffs.

Hon. William M. Evarts and Judge B. R. Curtis both pronounce the Wisconsin Railroad law unconstitutional, mainly because it takes the property of the railroads without compensation.

The competing lines of railway from Chicago to the East have advanced their rates of transportation on freight five cents per hundred pounds.

Foreign.

The London Times, commenting on the failure of the United States Senate to pass the Currency bill over the President's veto, remarks: "It is probable that the danger of increasing the paper currency has been permanently avoided," and it advises the substitution of Treasury currency for the present national bank issues....The House of Commons will take a recess during the Whitsuntide holidays, adjourning on the 12th of May until the 1st of June....The result of the election in Stroud, Gloucestershire, has been annulled on account of bribery, and a new election ordered....The Daily News says: "The lock-out of farm laborers will soon be submitted to arbitration for settlement."....Official dispatches from Madrid announce that fighting was resumed before Bilbao on Wednesday. Some advanced positions of the Carlists have been captured by the Republican forces, with slight loss.

A famine is prevailing in Asia Minor. It is estimated that the daily number of deaths from starvation in the town of Angora is 100. Angora is 235 miles distant from Constantinople, and is a city of 30,000 inhabitants.... Politics in Nova Scotia is as uncertain a science as in other countries. Mr. Woodworth, a member of the Provincial Legislature, had experience of the fact, the other day, in a novel and not delightful way. He had made charges reflecting upon the Provincial Secretary, and had been ordered by the Legislature to apologize. Woodworth refused to apologize or to leave the Legislative Chamber peaceably, whereupon he was ejected by force.

The Spanish Government has issued a decree calling for a levy of all persons liable to military duty over nineteen years of age.... Steerage passengers are now booked from Liverpool to New York for $15.

There is no longer any doubt that the Carlists have been driven from Bilbao by the Spanish Republican forces. This is the most important victory the Government forces have yet achieved, and is a severe if not a death blow to the Carlist cause....The prospects of a renewal of the war between France and Germany is evidently regarded as imminent in England. It was the subject of brief debate in the British House of Lords a few days ago. ....Fifty thousand miners in the Durham (England) collieries are on a strike.

Spanish items: Don Carlos will shortly issue a new proclamation to his troops. Gen. Concha has been appointed General-in-Chief of the northern army. During the bombardment of Bilbao 150 citizens were killed and wounded. Marshal Serrano was received by the people of Madrid with great enthusiasm. Triumphal arches were erected and houses gayly decked with flags. The Republican army is marching on Durango. A body of Carlists have been defeated in Valencia, and forty of their number killed.

THE PITTSBURGH TRAGEDY.

Confession of the Murderer of the Hamnett Family—The Story of a Most Cruel and Horrible Butchery.

The recent murder of the Hamnett family, near Pittsburgh, Pa., was one of the most cruel and diabolical human butcheries in all the annals of crime. The wretch that perpetrated the deed has been arrested and has made a full confession. He is an ignorant German, and goes by the name of Ernst Mintzing. He is described as a brutish, sullen-looking fellow, resembling, in general contour of features, Probst, the murderer of the Deering family, in Philadelphia, some years ago. In his confession the fiend states that he had been to the village, and after taking several drinks he bought some candy for the children of Mr. Hamnett, with whom he was living, and on his way home it occurred to him he ought to have Hamnett's money. How he went about getting the money we will let the murderer relate in his own words: "It occurred to me that, to get the money, I must kill the children. I found the ax in the kitchen, and, taking that with me, I went up into the room over the kitchen, where Robert Smith and myself slept. The bed was in the corner of the room, and I saw that Robert was sleeping soundly, with his face toward me. I took a position at the front of the bed, and with one blow killed the boy. He never moved. I can't say how it was that the boy's throat was cut. I may have struck him twice, but he never groaned. After the boy was dead, I went into the adjoining room, where Ida and little Emmie were sleeping. There were two beds in the room, one in the corner, and the other, the one occupied by the children, near the center. Both of the little girls were sleeping. I struck Ida first, and she never moved. I then raised the ax and struck at Emmie. She uttered a cry, and I hit her a second time. She did not groan again. After this I went down stairs and took a position just inside the door of the room adjoining the kitchen, and waited for Mr. and Mrs. Hamnett to come home. They came between 10 and 11 o'clock. Mr. Hamnett came into the house first. I was standing so that he could not see me, and I struck him from behind, using the same ax. He fell to the floor. Mrs. Hamnett then came rushing into the room, and as she passed through the door I struck her, but did not kill her. She shrieked once or twice, "Oh, God, John," and then I struck a second blow, which killed her instantly. Mrs. Hamnett and the baby were the only ones I hit twice. The others were killed with one blow. I used the ax all the time. I committed the deed to get Mr. Hamnett's money. I searched Mr. Hamnett's pockets, and obtained his pocket-book. It contained only $15 in paper money. I found Mrs. Hamnett's pocket-book on the sewing machine. There were only fifty cents in it. I looked over the house, but all the money I got was $15. The silver money I have I brought from Germany. My only motive was money; had no ill feelings toward the Hamnetts. I always liked the little children, and always bought them candy when I went to Homestead. The boy Smith and I were good friends, and I always liked Mr. and Mrs. Hamnett."

He disclaims firing the house, but says in rushing out he upset a lamp, and set the dwelling on fire. He then walked to Pittsburgh.

The Arkansas Rebellion.

Little Rock, May 5.—The United States troops formed a line across Markham street last night, on three separate occasions, to prevent an advance of the Baxter troops. Chief-Justice McClure to-day had a writ served on Gens. Churchill and Blocke, commanding them to produce the bodies of Messrs. Bennett and Searle, the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court. These officers replied by stating that martial law prevailed in Pulaski county at this time, and they knew of no orders except those which came from their superiors. The Baxter side has advices from Washington that Senator Clayton applied to the President for the use of the Federal troops in searching for the two Judges, but the President declined to let them be used for that purpose. A few days ago the Baxter side sent to St. Louis to have a duplicate seal of the State made. The seal was forwarded yesterday by express. This morning, before the express agent had time to deliver it, a squad of Brooks' men entered his office and captured the seal.

Little Rock, May 6.—The two missing Judges, Bennett and Searle, escaped from their captors in Saline county last night, and arrived in the city to-day under a Federal escort, which went out last night, and again this morning, to look for them. The Judges of the Supreme Court, McClure, Stephens and Searle, held a meeting to-day to hear an application for a mandamus to compel the State Treasurer to honor the draft of Joseph Brooks on the Treasury as Governor. The matter was taken under advisement.

The measles, and, it is reported, the smallpox also, have broken out in the Brooks camp. One lieutenant died yesterday, and was buried to-day in the State-House grounds with military honors.

Matters are becoming more critical and complicated every day.

A somewhat fishy story is in circulation here, to the effect that the officer who captured the Supreme Court Judges had orders from Baxter to assassinate them.

The Governor of Wisconsin and the Railroads.

Gov. Taylor, of Wisconsin, has issued a proclamation warning the railroads not to violate the new law, and declaring that he will employ the whole power of the State to enforce it. The following is the closing portion of his proclamation:

"Now, therefore, I, William R. Taylor, Governor of the State of Wisconsin, do proclaim and make known that the law of the land must be respected and obeyed. While none are so weak as to be without its protection, none are so strong as to be above its restraints. If the provisions of the law be deemed oppressive, resistance to its mandates will not abate, but rather multiply the anticipated evils. It may be that the law is defective in some of its details; but it is still the law of the land, enacted by the Legislature in the exercise of its conceded powers, and in accordance with the clearly-defined sentiment of the people of the State. It is the right of all to test its validity through the constituted channels; but with that right is coupled the duty of yielding a general obedience to its requirements until it has been pronounced invalid by competent authority. I am not without hope that better counsels will yet prevail with the railroad companies of the State; but if they, or any of them, are fixed in the determination to pursue the policy announced, upon them will fall the penalties of the law and the consequences of a severe popular condemnation. I therefore enjoin all railroad corporations, their officers and agents, peaceably to submit to the law; for since the Executive is charged with the responsibility of seeing that the laws are faithfully executed, all the functions of his office will be exercised to that end; and for this purpose he invokes the aid and co-operation of all good citizens.

A Milwaukee dispatch of the 1st inst. says "Several passengers on the Milwaukee and St. Paul railroad tendered the legal fare yesterday and to-day, and, the same being refused, rode free, the conductors having no instructions to put them off. It is stated that employes of the road have been sent out to travel with the trains and take the names and addresses of such passengers, with the object of suing them, and thus bringing the case into court."

Savage Sanity.—Travelers generally report that insanity is of very rare occurrence among savages; from which the Journal of Mental Science rather superficially reasons that diseases of the brain are due to the vicious usages of civilized society, such as alcoholism, ambition for wealth, consanguine intermarriage, hereditary predisposition, etc. Some of these usages are, of course, productive of mental degeneracy or aberration; but, physiologically speaking, monogamy could as justly be assigned as one of civilization's insanity producers, as contrasted with savage polygamy. The whole civilized system must be pronounced insane if the Journal's line of argument is logically carried out.

Popular Weather Signs.

Would it not serve a useful purpose if some scientific meteorologist were to gather into a mass the various weather signs—whether valuable or not—treasured by the farmers and other common-sense people of the country, and then sift them, so that those of real value may have their proper influence, and those which are merely fanciful may cease to mislead?

That there are weather signs of abundance, everybody knows. That the greater part of these signs are utterly valueless, every person of intelligence can testify. Yet that they do practically influence the time and mode of the planting of crops, and of their after culture, will be acknowledged by many who would not be suspected of the folly, and who can give no other reason for it than the force of habit.

"We are going to have a dry month," said a farmer the other day.

"How do you know?" he was asked.

"By the Indian sign of the new moon," he replied. "Its horns hung so sloping that they could hold no water."

His companion laughed. "Why, that's my Injin sign for wet moon. The horns slope so that they loose all the water."

The sign in the one case was no doubt as prophetic as in the other.

"Always plant your potatoes in the dark of the moon, if you wish to have a full crop," I heard my neighbor say. "But never kill your pork nor boil your soap at such a time, unless you are willing to have then shrink to nothing."

"What is your authority for this?"

"I have always so heard," he answered with some hesitation, "and always so practiced. Potatoes, you know, being roots, naturally love darkness. And soap and bacon—I suppose they take their cue from the state of the moon. The fact is, I only know that this is the old-time rule."

"We are to have frost on the 19th of May," said a farmer to me on the 5th of April.

I was shocked, for he looked wise and lugubrious, and a frost at that time in our latitude would have cost millions of dollars. I asked: "How do you know."

"Because we had a fog on the 10th of March."

He saw me smiling and added, "I have heard this rule even since I was a boy, and it has never failed yet."

"The surest rule I know for fortelling the weather throughout the year," said a planter possessed of at least a semi-collegiate education, "is to note the twelve days between new Christmas (from Dec. 25 to Jan. 6). The months of the ensuing year are apt to be wet or dry, cool or warm, according to the days corresponding." He seriously declared that for many years he had "pitched his crop" and ordered his plantation work under the guidance of this rule, and found that it served well. No doubt, for that amount of time in advance, it was quite, as good as any other rule in ordinary use.—F. R. G., in Hearth and Home.

Behind the Scenes.

Sothern, according to an interviewer in After Dinner, says: "Does acting tell on me? Yes, indeed, it does. Until within the last two years, I have never given myself more than four weeks' rest in a year. I have noticed the wear and tear on my constitution because my labors are heavier than the public know anything about. I will give the work of one day, when there is a matinee. I perhaps have a scenic and property rehearsal at 9 o'clock; a company rehearsal at 10 o'clock, and this rehearsal lasts until 1 o'clock; I have half an hour for lunch, go on the stage at 2 o'clock, and act till half-past four; I dine at 5; from six to seven rest; at 8 o'clock on the stage again; the performance is over at half-past ten or a quarter to eleven; and then I am so weary that after a light supper I am compelled to go at once to bed. In my early days, when the star actor had to write out his own part, instead of buying printed books, I have frequently written and studied twelve long parts a week, and each of these were seven lengths, making an aggregate of twelve times 308 lines of fresh matter per week. This was to arrive at the mere question of getting the words into my head; the analyzation of the character being another thing to do afterward. I have had to study all day when I was not rehearsing or eating and to go straight home from the theater at night and stay up till three and four and five in the morning; I have been obliged to get up at eight o'clock the same morning, read my parts over again and go to a rehearsal at 10 o'clock. I got my memory so well cultivated that I at last would get my wife to read through a long farce, just repeating the speeches twice, without ever having seen the words myself, and get through it actually every word.

Letters from Livingstone.

John W. Livingstone, who lives at Listowel, Canada, lately received two letters from his brother, the late Dr. Livingstone, covering eight pages of closely written foolscap. One is dated Monyuma, in the Cannibal country, April and November, 1870, and the other Lake Bangwodo, December, 1872, and both are marked "private and confidential." The doctor mentioned meeting Mr. Stanley, whom he styles his good Samaritan, sent by Mr. James Gordon Bennett, of the New York Herald, and whose conduct while there was beyond all praise. The doctor finishes the last letter by saying: "If the good Lord alone gives me strength and influence to complete this task, I shall not grudge my hunger and toil. Above all, if He permit me to put a stop to the enormous evils of this inland slave trade, I shall bless his name with all my heart. The Nile's sources are valuable to me only as a means of enabling me to open my mouth among men. It is the power I hope to apply to remedy an enormous evil, and join my poor little helping hand in the great revolution that, in his all-embracing providence, He has been carrying on for ages.

An itinerant minstrel was arrested in Missouri and fined, for a small theft, $2 and costs. He had no money, and the charitable Judge adjourned the court for half an hour, the minstrel gave a show, and the court thus took the fine out in music.

Comfort for the Poor.

One of the pleasantest features of Liverpool is the great number of really neat and very comfortable houses for the working class. In some parts of the city, especially toward and in the environ known as Bootle, there are hundreds of small, two-story brick cottages "all in a row," cheap, convenient, and attractive. In walking through the city one finds street after street lined with small houses about sixteen feet wide by thirty-five feet deep, built in Gothic style. These houses are similar in design; a narrow hall with stairs leading to the upper story. A parlor, or front room, perhaps twelve feet square. A dining-room of similar size back of the parlor, and then a leanto—or kitchen; from two to four bed-rooms up-stairs. Thus are arranged the homes of thousands of people in Liverpool, who for a yearly rental ranging from twenty to twenty-five pounds, or from a hundred to a hundred and twenty-five dollars a year, have homes instead of tenement house rooms in which to live. As a general thing, the houses of the working class are very neat, well-furnished and pleasant. The little yard in front of the house is kept clean; the little window over the door enables one to see that on the ledge inside has been placed some ornament—usually a plaster cast of a horse, a cow, Christ on the cross, a jolly tailor, Mary and her little lamb, or something of that kind. In some instances the wife takes one or two boarders of her own order to eke out a carefully spent income. The English working-man lives on less food than does the working-man in America. He buys closer and wastes less. He drinks beer instead of whisky, and takes more time for his meals. In England people are more careful to buy what they need, a very sensible plan worthy of universal adoption.

How to Get Rich.

How to get rich—has been a question beyond the conception of the finite mind. If air castles were visible to the seeing eye, we apprehend the space between us and the sky would be so thick with them that the glaring orb of day could not be seen. Those of us who do not build such castles, are glad they are not real, but only imaginary; for were they true, we would be deprived of that which is most beneficial to man—namely, light. We can count over in our mind, many who are contemplating doing wonders before life ends. They are ever talking of what they are going to do, and how they are going to do; yet they seem to be making no more advancement toward the object of their imagination than a turtle does in climbing a sycamore tree. Whenever you see a man who delights to tell what he is intending to do, you may raise your sail and let your vessel drive, for these persons will never gain enough of your riches to raise a ripple on the sea of your prosperity. We often see persons who would be called by the name of gentlemen, strutting up and down in the world, as if they knew more than any Professor, and owned a farm in the gold region; when at the same time, they have to borrow money to buy the tobacco that makes the fumes from their nasty, stinking pipes. If a man would become rich, and at the same time a gentleman, he must act equal to his abilities, and keep himself so that he will be agreeable to all whom he may meet.

How the Eye is Swept and Washed.

For us to be able to see objects clearly and distinctly, it is necessary that the eye should be kept clean. For this purpose it is furnished with a little gland, from which flows a watery fluid (tears) which is spread over the eye by the lid, and it is afterward swept off by it, and runs through a hole in the bone to the under surface of the nose, where the warm air passing over it while breathing, evaporates it. It is remarkable that no such gland can be found in the eyes of fish, as the element in which they live answers the same purpose.

If the eye had not been furnished with a liquid to wash it, and a lid to sweep it off, things would appear as they do when you look through a dusty glass. Along the edges of the eyelids there are a great number of little tubes or glands, from which flows an oily substance which spreads over the surface of the skin, and prevents the edges from being sore or irritated, and it also helps to keep tears within the lid. There are also six little muscles, attached to the eye, which enable us to move it in every direction; and when we consider the different motions they are capable of giving to the eye, we cannot but admire the goodness of Him who formed them, and thus saved us the trouble of turning our heads every time we wished to view an object.

Picturesque Venice.—A correspondent, writing from Venice, says: "While we note the strongly individualized characteristics of the city, we are struck by the almost entire absence of animals; the love for brilliant colors among the female population of all grades; the striking beauty of the humbler female classes, far more noticeable than elsewhere in Italy; and the prevalence of the Jewish type among the people. The daily scene is pleasantly diversified by the numerous gayly-dressed gondoliers; the picturesque water-carriers, always women, and dressed in a style quite traditional and exclusive; the marvelous uniforms of the police, each one caparisoned like a military major-general, cocked hat, gold lace, sword and all; the turbaned Turks, sipping their coffee and smoking their chibouques, in the cafes under the arcade; and the deep red fez upon the heads of handsome Greeks from the lower Adriatic."

Coughing Volitional.—Dr. Brown-Sequard, who ought to be the best of authorities, thinks that two-thirds of the world's coughing might be prevented by a strong effort of the will. He tells us of a French soldier-nurse, who, upon entering a ward of his hospital, used to say, "The first patient who coughs here shall go without food to-day;" and very seldom heard a cough after that. Doubtless, indeed, much coughing is of nervous impulse, to which the will yields too readily; and many diseases are needlessly and perilously aggravated thereby.

FARM, HOUSEHOLD AND KITCHEN.

The Farm.

Grandmother Grey by the window sat,
And looked at the setting sun,
And watched the cows as they slowly came
From the pasture one by one;
And back again to the "long ago"
Her memory traveled fast,
While the dim eyes closed as she lived again
'Mid scenes of the happy past.

"Let me see," she murmured: "Ah, yes, I know;
It was there by the pasture gate,
That Robin with milking pail and stool
For my coming used to wait.
It was just a week of our wedding day
That he fell so sick—and died;
And I laid my heart in the grave with him,
And loved none other beside.

"But, ah! it was for my father's sake
That I wedded Farmer Grey,
And we've both been tender and true and kind
As the years have slipped away.
But I wonder much when the hour comes
That my soul be called above,
Shall I, as the wife of Farmer Grey,
Seek Robin, my only love?"

And the sun went down in the golden west,
And the cows came safely home,
As Grandmother Grey by the window sat,
While her thoughts seemed yet to roam,
But the angels came for her waiting soul
While the twilight shadows fell,
And Grandmother Grey, the farmer's wife,
With Robin has gone to dwell.

We have faith in future prices to believe it will pay to feed hogs fifty-cent corn.

Drives and walks should not be injured by heavy teams when they are soft with spring rains.

Horseradish should be about every man's premises. It is a delicious relish, especially in early spring.

The way for a farmer to trust in Providence is to do faithful hard work and attend strictly to his farm.

A Hoosier farmer says that we should select white seed corn with white cobs, and yellow seed corn with red cobs.

Let all good men lay down this rule, that when the men stop for lunch or supper, the horses should be fed also.

Calves are very apt to scour after learning to drink. Now, nine times in ten, this is not diarrhea, but simply indigestion, and a little rennet with their milk will effectually obviate the difficulty.

George F. Wilcox, of the American Rural Home, says his experience is to the effect that in draining land the expense of properly laying stone and filling up the ditch is more than that of buying and putting down tile.

Scratches in Horses.—Take white pine pitch rosin, beeswax and honey, one ounce each; of fresh lard, one-half pound; melt well together over a slow fire; stir till thick, so that the parts may not settle and separate. This also makes an excellent application for harness galls, cuts and sores of all kinds on horses and cattle.

Some paper has stated that sulphur fed to sheep will prove a sure remedy for ticks. This is true under favorable circumstances. An occasional feed of one tablespoonful of sulphur to one quart of salt will prove beneficial to the general health of sheep, and if they are in good order will keep ticks away without fail. But no amount of sulphur will kill the ticks on sheep which are already overrun with them and pinched up with little food. A daily feed of grain will prove of more benefit by interposing a layer of fat between the muscles.

An English gardener suggests what seems a good plan for ridding houses of ants. It is at least safer than scattering poison. Bits of dry, clean sponge, sprinkled over with sugar, are placed in the vicinity of the ant runs; they quickly fill all the interstices, and may be dipped into boiling water for a few seconds, and again used in the same manner on a second crop. Bones with a small portion of meat attached prove also an excellent bait, and bottles containing a little sweet oil, placed near the nests, will entice ants in considerable numbers.

The New York Herald says there is no use in manuring land to grow weeds; in buying tools to rust out under a stone wall; in erecting buildings to rot away for want of paint and care; in buying animals and leaving them to the unhindered action of disease; in accumulating manure to fill the air with its exhalations and the brooks with its leachings; in raising forage to floor a barn with; in buying land to yearly lose its strength and virtue; in growing crops to feed unheeded insects. Yet more than one of these defects may be seen on almost every farm in the country, and the extent to which they lower the average success of our farmers is greater than would be believed.

Cut-Worms.—We have succeeded in greatly reducing the numbers of this pest by enticing a flock of poultry into the field while it was being plowed. The fowls followed the plow closely, picking up every cut-worm exposed, and searching every furrow for more. There is no other way of ridding the fields of these vermin but by encouraging their natural enemies—crows and blackbirds. While these creatures are killed or driven off we shall suffer from the depredations of the insects which are their natural prey. To prevent the destruction of the young corn by the cut-worms to some extent, the seed should be rolled in common pine tar and then dried in plaster before it is sown.—New York Times.

Household Suggestions.

If you are buying carpets for durability, choose small figures.

Save your suds for garden plants, or for garden yards, when sandy.

If your flat-irons are rough, rub them with fine salt and it will make them smooth.

Wood ashes and common salt made compact with water will stop the cracks of a stove, and prevent the smoke from escaping.

To clean a browned porcelain kettle, boil peeled potatoes in it. The porcelain will be rendered nearly as white as when new.

To ascertain whether a bed be damp or not, after the bed is warmed, put a glass goblet in between the sheets, and if the bed be damp, in a few minutes drops of wet will appear on the inside of the glass.

A strong solution of carbolic acid and water poured into holes kills all the ants it touches, and the survivors immediately take themselves off.

Housekeepers should know that a small piece of paper or linen, moistened with spirits of turpentine, and put into a bureau or wardrobe for a single day, two or three times, is a sufficient preservation against moths.

For cleaning glass a newspaper is one of the best articles to use. The chemical operations of some of the ingredients of printing ink give a beautiful polish. Slightly moisten a piece of paper, roll it up, and rub the glass; then take a dry, soft piece and repeat the process. No lint will remain, as is the case when cloth is used.

If you want a comfortable bed, here is the unfailing recipe: First, very good springs; secondly, a thick wool mattress over that. Both mattresses should be re-made every two years. Who, loves not the ease and comfort from a good bed? Why not have less show out of doors and more comfort? Some people have all their pleasure in dress, glitter, pinchbeck. Shoddyism!

Kitchen Recipes.

Cup Cake.—One cup of butter, one cup of sour milk, four cups flour, five eggs, three cups of sugar, one teaspoonful of soda.

Saratoga Potatoes.—Slice raw potatoes and throw into cold water. Have ready lard, boiling hot; season the potatoes (after draining) with salt and pepper; fry a light brown.

Beef Patties.—Chop fine rare roast beef, season with pepper, salt, and a little onion. Make a plain paste, cut into shape like an apple puff, fill with the mince, and bake quickly.

Waffles.—One quart of flour, one pint of sour milk, one teaspoonful of soda, four eggs, a piece of butter the size of a large egg, and a little salt. Bake in waffle-irons. Sour cream and less butter improves them.

Parsnip Cakes.—Grate raw parsnip; mix with it an equal quantity of bread crumbs; add two or three eggs, seasoning to taste; add milk to make the ingredients into cakes, and fry them in butter a light brown, over a slow fire.

Pop-Corn Pudding—Delicious.—Soak two quarts of freshly-popped corn in three pints of sweet milk, over night. When ready to bake, add three well beaten eggs, a little salt, and sugar to taste. Bake like a custard pudding.

Lemon Jelly.—Two cups of sugar, yolks of three eggs, juice of two lemons. Cook till thickened by setting in boiling water, then add the well-beaten whites of three eggs; spread between the layers of the cake, and trim off the rough edges.

Removing Grass Stains.—An exchange says that simply wetting and rubbing the stained cloth in cold water will remove all traces of the grass. Fruit stains will disappear on application of boiling-hot water. No soap should be used in either case.

Transit of Venus.

The coming transit of the planet Venus is a matter of great importance to the scientific world. The phenomenon will occur on the 8th of December next, and extensive preparations are being made for the observation of the passage of that planet across the sun's disk. The last transit visible from the earth occurred in 1769, and there will not be another till the year 2004. By the knowledge we now possess, as a basis for calculation, it is impossible to ascertain the earth's distance from the sun within 300,000 miles. When the total distance is about 91,480,000 miles, as slight a matter as the distance above mentioned would seem to be of no practical importance; but a variation of forty times the earth's diameter renders computations too uncertain to suit astronomers. It is expected that the observation, which will be taken next December, will leave a margin of only 50,000 miles open to doubt. As the transit will occur in the winter, the base of observation must be located south of the equator. Great Britain will have special stations in the Sandwich Islands and in seven other localities. The United States will have eight parties in the field. France will occupy three stations, Russia four or five, and Germany five. The problem is simply the familiar geometrical process of constructing two sides of a triangle in order to determine the third.

Sheridan.

The greatest triumph of Richard Brinsley Sheridan was his speech at the impeachment of Warren Hastings. Fox said that "all he had ever read, when compared with it dwindled into nothing, and vanished like vapor before the sun." Pitt, who was ever slow to acknowledge the triumph of his rivals, declared it surpassed all the "eloquence of ancient and modern times, and possessed everything that genius or art could furnish to agitate and control the human mind." Logan was Hastings' council and defender. After Sheridan had spoken for an hour, he said, "This is declamatory assertion without proof." At the end of another hour he said, "This is a most wonderful oration." In another hour, "Mr. Hastings has acted very unjustifiably." In one hour more he exclaimed, "Mr. Hastings is a most atrocious criminal." And before Sheridan had finished his speech Logan became boisterous, and exclaimed aloud, "Of all the monsters of iniquity, the most enormous is Warren Hastings."

A Wonderful Echo in Colorado Canon.—Echo Park, where we remained one week, lies at the junction of Green and Bear rivers, and takes its name from the remarkable echo that may be heard there. When a gun is discharged, total silence follows the report for a moment; then, with a startling suddenness, the echo is heard seeming at a great distance—say five miles to the south—whence it comes back in separate and distinct reverberations, as if leaping from glen to glen. Louder and quicker grows the sound until apparently directly opposite, when a full volume of sound is returned; then once more the echo is heard, like the snapping of a cap, far to the eastward.

Hints Concerning Health.

These warm April suns, says an Eastern journal, will tempt many young and inconsiderate persons to make changes in their underclothing which may prove very detrimental to their health. Flannel next the skin should by no means be removed until after the cold spell which always comes near the middle of May, and then thinner flannel, or raw silk should be worn in place of what is taken. In India, the British army is clothed in flannel the year round, and this regulation has been found effectual in preventing those summer complaints which formerly cost so many lives in that tropical country. We commend the suggestion herein to mothers of young children. Those living on the sea coast cannot, with safety, dispense with flannel entirely, even during the heated term. An east wind, or any sudden change in the skies, should find the safe covering ready to be put on at a moment's notice. A close observer will find that he takes cold, not when the weather changes from warm to cold, but from cold to warm. Thrown off his guard by the mildness of the temperature, he neglects necessary precautions, and suffers the inevitable penalty. When the difference in the height of the mercury at noon and midnight is greatest, then care is most necessary in the regulation of one's clothing as to amount and warmth. "The greatest sensation of cold we ever experienced," says a writer on health topics, "was in the morning at 5 o'clock, with the thermometer at 56 deg. in Texas, where we were accustomed to ride under a sun heat of 150 deg. during the day.

Persons of good constitution and sound health are apt to think they can violate hygienic laws with impunity; that they can eat at irregular intervals, and anything they fancy; can sleep as much or as little, and when they please; can sit with damp feet, and do, in general, exactly as they please, and it will be all the same. As well might William B. Astor fancy that his vast fortune needs no looking after; that extravagance will not waste it; that bad investments will not diminish it; that panics will not affect it. He knows better than that, and every possessor of fine health should know that this invaluable gift is to be cherished, cared for, and preserved, or, like other riches, it will take to itself wings and fly away.

To those who live in close or crowded rooms, we mention an experiment made by a physician in England: "I have repeatedly taken organic matter from the windows of a crowded room and experimented with it. This matter condenses on the glass and walls in cold weather, and may be taken up by means of a pipette. If allowed to stand, it forms a thick, apparently glutinous mass; but when this is examined by a microscope, it is seen to be a clearly marked confervoid (resembling seaweed) growth. This matter in the air is as injurious to health as organic impurities in water, and acts as a ferment by which diseases of the nature of fever are engendered."

Caught at Last.

In 1868, while petroleum still exerted the magical power of the philosopher's stone, Pennsylvania was one day alarmed at a daring and heavy robbery. Petroleum Centre, Venango county, was the scene of this operation. The circumstances will be remembered. A party of four men, armed and masked, entered the house of one Bennahoff in broad day, gagged and bound the inmates, and ransacked two safes. They found and carried away nearly half a million dollars, leaving double that sum in a third safe, which they could not open. The leaders of this gang were James Saeger and a man named Pheiffen, and their accomplices two professional cracksmen. The plunder was carried away in a pillow-slip and concealed, Immediately after the robbery the leaders presented themselves at a ball in order to avert suspicion. The ruse was entirely successful. Saeger, a few days later, beat his companions by carrying off the contents of the slip and departing for pastures new. Pheiffen was suspected of the robbery, tried, convicted, and sentenced to the penitentiary for fifteen years. He confessed the crime and implicated Saeger. For six years the detectives of the United States have been searching for Saeger, unsuccessfully, of course. A day or two ago, a rough-looking Texan entered a restaurant at Denver, and called for dinner. His name was McGee, but his voice was the voice of Saeger. The restaurant was kept by one Potter, a relative of the incarcerated Pheiffen, and adopted son of Saegar. McGee was found to be Saeger. By means of a little strategy and a great deal of whisky, Saeger was betrayed to a detective, and his six years' wanderings brought to a sudden termination. He had visited Cuba, Mexico and Australia, finally investing his stolen capital in Texan cattle, which he had brought to Denver for sale. The bulk of the property of Bennahoff still remains in beeves, therefore; and he or his heirs may yet recover it.—Chicago Tribune.

A Hairless Horse.

There recently arrived at San Francisco an equine curiosity in the shape of a hairless horse from Australia. The name of the remarkable animal is "Caoutchouc;" and he was captured in the neighborhood of Balloon river, Queensland, when about two years old. He is now about six years of age, is a pure black from the tip of his ears to the hoofs, but without a single hair on any part of his body. The color is not unlike that of a black horse very closely clipped, but the microscope fails to detect a single hair from nose to tail. He is about fifteen hands high, well made, and very compact, with fine, clean legs, powerful forearms and thigh, and a clean, bloodlike, but unnaturally broad head, from which sparkle a bright pair of eyes beaming with good temper and docility. His owner paid a handsome price for him, but refused £1,500 in the colonies before leaving for this country. This freak of nature was examined by several eminent veterinary surgeons in Australia, and they came to the same opinion in regard to the horse—which was, that there was no deception practiced, and that in reality he was born without the least particle of hair upon him, and consequently is one of the greatest curiosities in the way of horse-flesh extant.

The Folly of Writing Love-Letters.

A tired husband went home from his work last night, and, taking off his coat, requested his wife to mend a rent in the sleeve, then sank upon the sofa behind the evening paper. Wife-like, she took up the coat; woman-like, she dived into the pockets. From the inside pocket she drew forth a letter, directed, in delicate chirography, to her husband. With darkening brow, she quickly took the suspicious-looking missive from the envelope, and, without noticing the date, began to read:

"Dear George: I am lonely, oh, so lonely, since you left me last Thursday night."

"Ah, ha! that was the lodge night, he told me," said the now thoroughly interested woman, as she glanced viciously over at her husband, who appeared to be just falling asleep. "Oh, how can you sleep, with the weight of this deep sin upon you? But I'll see what more the brazen hussy has to say, if it kills me." With one hand pressed to her throbbing heart, she read on:

"I know I am foolish, darling, but when you are away there seems to be a barrier between me and all that is bright and lovely. The sun does not shine half so bright; the moon is but a white spot in the sky, and the stars stare coldly down when you are not with me, lord of my life and heart."

"Was it for this? was it for this?" moaned the unhappy wife.

"Fortune speed the day when we may be united in those indissoluble bonds that are sacred in the eyes of heaven and earth—"

"What mockery! Does he or she consider that his vows made to me are sacred? What are they going to do with me, anyway, I wonder? Poison, perhaps. Oh, false, false, perfidious man! Oh, wicked, hellish, designing wanton!" Still the suffering woman read the letter, though each word burned to ashes a thousand hopes and joys:

"When we need meet no more clandestinely and tremble in each other's embrace—"

"I'd make you tremble if I had you in my embrace a minute!"

"When my head may be pillowed in safety upon your breast—"

"The fiendess!"

"And your arms twine in loving pressure about me—"

"Furies!"

"And our lips smother the tender words that would escape them."

"Oh, the sirenic she-devil!" hissed the woman, as she tried to keep down the boiling rage within her. She crushed the letter in her hands; then threw it upon the floor and sprang upon it with her heels, as though it were a snake, and ground it into the carpet. Then with clenched hands and impressed lips, she strode rapidly back and forth across the room, ever and anon making a move as if to spring like a fury upon her husband, who, with a paper over his face, was apparently sound asleep, dreaming, perhaps, of the wicked temptress that had come between him and his fond wife. Presently a reaction took place, and the wretched woman sank into a chair and found relief in that blessed panacea for female ills—a flood of tears.

Grown calmer after a while, she picked up the rumpled letter, smoothed out the creases, and with an air of mingled despair and resignation, looked for the signature.

"Your ever loving and devoted, but poor, apprehensive—"

"What's this! Flut—flut—tering birdie. A-d-a—Ada. Why bless me! this is one of my own old letters to George. What a fool I—"

A sound from the sofa, first like escaping steam, and then like a car rattling o'er the stony street, assured her that her ridiculous actions had been witnessed by her husband. Burning with shame, the foolish woman flew to her room, and locked herself in, and she is almost as miserable now as when she felt that she was a wronged and deceived wife.—Missouri Brunswicker.

People are apt to complain ov the phools in the world; but the phools are vittles and drink to the wize man.

He who iz reddy at enny time to leave the sosiety ov himself, iz possessed ov one grate element ov happiness.

The grate truths are fu and simple, and those who talk much are the ones who say little.

Kisses.—Eight basial diversities of kisses are mentioned in the Scriptures: The kiss of Salutation, Sam. xx. 41; Valediction, Ruth, ii. 9; Reconciliation, 2 Sam, xiv. 33; Subjection, Psalms ii. 12; Approbation, Proverbs ii, 4; Adoration, 1 Kings xix. 18; Treachery, Matt. xxvi. 49; Affection, Gen. xiv. 15. There are some other kinds of kisses which young ladies receive over gates o' moonlight nights, which the Scriptures do not mention—neither do the young ladies.

First Steel Pens—Josiah Mason.

I suppose you are the last person—at any rate from the United States—who will hear the history of the first steel pen on the very spot where the pen was manufactured. My uncle was manufacturer of slit key rings by hand, such as you have just seen us manufacture so rapidly by machinery. It was in the old stage-coach days, and so soon as he had made his carpet-bag full, he went up to London to sell them. On one of these visits he saw in a shop window in Cheapside a steel pen of a very uncouth shape, and as he described it, "bad cut." Knowing how to make a good quill pen, he argued, "I can make out of my steel wire a better pen than that is." He bought one, took it to Birmingham, and with a hammer and a file made two better pens. One of them he retained, and the other he sent to Mr. Perry, the patentee in London. My uncle was and still remains a man of remarkable simplicity of character and very scrupulous integrity. As soon as the letter was mailed he became uneasy in mind under the apprehension that he had transgressed the patent laws. So much did the fear of trouble from this cause affect him that he was quite unable to attend to business, and, at the end of the third day after mailing his letter, some such soliloquy as the following took place while my uncle occupied the self-same seat you sit upon.

"I would not wonder if Mr. Perry were to come down with a sheriff to arrest me. It is just about time for them to arrive here. I will tell them the plain simple truth, that I have made two pens only, and sent one to Mr. Perry and retained the other; that I had no intention to defraud Mr. Perry, and I will throw myself on his mercy."

At that moment a post-chaise drove rapidly up to the door; there were a few hasty raps at the door, and on opening it a small, sharp—looking man of marked Hebrew features and voice with a slightly foreign accent, said:

"Is your name Mason?"

"Yes."

"You made this steel pen?"

"Yes."

"Can you make more steel pens like this?"

"Yes."

"Then your fortune's made and my fortune's made."

They sat down at this table, drew up the only agreement that was made between them, and we continue under the original contract, to be the sole manufacturers of Perry's pen.

I asked him how Gillott came to get so early into the business, and was told that two of Mason's sisters used to keep house for him, and when their work was done in the house, would take a hand in the factory, so John Gillott's wife taught him the business.

Josiah Mason has gone to his rest, after a long life of unostentatious benevolence, and left behind him well established and well indorsed charities, an honor to himself and his native city. His nephew, Fred. Smith, died some time before him.

One of our most pleasant recollections of a visit to England in 1859 is the story of the first good and practical steel pen.

A Writing Machine.

There is a fair chance now of writing being done away with altogether. An instrument has been invented by one James Densmore, of New York, called the "Type Writer." It is about the size of a sewing machine, and is worked like a piano. The keys are in four "banks" or rows, twelve to fourteen inches in length, so that the key-board is about fifteen inches wide, and the process of writing is to sit before the instrument and manipulate the keys. When the key is struck the type is thrown up, and will not fall until the finger is removed from the key. The types are engraved on the ends of a series of steel bars, pivoted on a circle, so that they may vibrate on the pivots and all strike at the same point. Directly over the point where the types all strike an inking ribbon is drawn, so that every type will strike it before it can strike anything else, and is made to move so as to touch every time in a fresh place. Directly over this inking ribbon the paper carriage is made to move from right to left, and the paper is arranged to go under a cylinder or roller, which acts as a platen, so that every time a key is struck, a type is thrown up against the inking ribbon, carrying the ribbon with it against the cylindrical platen, and there it leaves its impression. The remaining machinery is very ingenious. The speed is said to be three times that of the pen, and the force required very small. An expert may write sixty-five words a minute. The machine has forty-four characters. Such is the type-writing machine. All we now want is a spelling machine and a patent brain-worker, through which a man may hatch machine poetry, and the summit of human ambition will have been attained.

The Difference.

In one of the eastern towns of Massachusetts lived, some years ago, Uncle Bill Jones, a hard-working stone-mason, a man of ready wit, but, unfortunately, too much addicted to drink. Regularly each morning at an early hour he made a visit to the grocery store to lay in a stock of the ardent for the day's consumption. With the same regularity the Rev. Dr. C., a kindly-natured Orthodox clergyman, in quest of his morning chop or midday roast, sought the village butcher shop. After meeting often in their morning walks, Dr. C. felt it his duty to mildly reprove Uncle Bill for his easily besetting sin. So one morning, after their usual hearty salutation, the good dominie began:

"You and I walk out early, Uncle Bill; but do you ever reflect how different are our errands?"

"Well, for the matter," said Uncle Bill, "if we bring the thing down to Scripter test, my errand will come out ahead."

"How so?" asked Dr. C.

"Why, you walk after the flesh, but I walk after the spirit!"

At Glasgow, Ky., is Edward Chambers, aged thirty months, and weighing 118 pounds. The very calf of his leg is eighteen inches in circumference. He has a most expensive appetite, and his parents, being poor, are much bothered to keep up his rations.

WHAT BECOMES OF EDITORS.

What becomes of the editors?
That's what we'd like to know;
They [illegible] good on earth,
And to [illegible].
But something seems to tell us
They are a peculiar set,
And in the great hereafter
Will be "left out in the wet."

We've been thinking the question over
And it troubles us [illegible]
It comes to us in the [illegible]
And with dreams disturbs our sleep,
And the more we con the question
The deeper it seems to get,
And [illegible] this conclusion:
They'll be "left out in the wet."

Now, reason to yourself a moment:
Would it do to let them in?
Wouldn't they go to interviewing
And discussing everything?
Wouldn't they have two parties,
And a hobby, too, to pet?
That thing would never do [illegible]
They'll be "left out in the wet."

It's very well to smile, sir,
And say, "Your head ain't level,"
But did you ever know an editor
That didn't keep a "devil?"
You don't suppose for a moment
That he in there could get,
And be a-[illegible] "Copy?" [illegible]
They'll be "left out in the wet."

There's one more point we'll mention—
We hope you won't get offended—
But its "currently reported"
That the "free list is suspended,"
Now, did you ever know an editor
That has "pulled his weasel" yet?
They're not going to do it there—
They'll "stay out in the wet."

Humor.

Everybody's companion is nobody's friend.

The Danbury News man says: "There is nothing that will change a man so much as great grief, unless it is shaving off his mustache.

Domestic young lady (making a pie)—"Frank, the kitchen's no place for boys. Has dough such an attraction for you?" Clever Youth—"It isn't the dough, it's the dear."

A drummer, who was greatly addicted to whisky, was asked by a reviewing officer what made his nose so red. "Please, your honor," said he, "I always blush in the presence of a general officer."

An Irishman who had just landed said: "The first bit of mate I ever ate in this country was a roasted potato, boiled yesterday. And if you don't believe me I can show it to you, for I have it in my pocket."

"If this jury convicts my client," said a Missouri lawyer, rolling up his sleeves and displaying his ponderous fists, "I shall be compelled to meet each one and hammer justice into his soul through his head."

A man left a bony steed on Main street last Saturday, and, coming back a short time afterward, discovered that a funny youth had placed a card against the fleshless ribs, bearing the notice, "Oats wanted—inquire within."

Several Irishmen were disputing one day upon their own best points, when one said in an aggressive manner, "Faith, and I'm a brick." "And, indade," said another, "I'm a bricklayer," and felled the first speaker to the ground.

Teacher—"Who was the first man?" Head Scholar—"Washington; he was first in war, first in—" Teacher—"No, no; Adam was the first man." "Oh! if you're talking of foreigners, I s'pose he was."

A lady of remarkable conversational powers approached a medical friend with: "Dr. S——, I have a very sore tongue." "Let me look at it," says the doctor. The unruly member was duly protruded. "It is sunburnt, madam, sunburnt," remarked the doctor, who suddenly recollected that his professional services were wanted in another direction.

There is a Danbury legend to the effect that a party desiring to transact some private business with another was invited by the other to step with him into a neighboring store. "But we will be disturbed there," said the first party. "O, no," said the second party; "they don't advertise."—Danbury News.

The woman of the coming time—
Shall man to vote appoint her?
Well, yes or no your bottom dime
She'll do as she's a min'ter,
We know she "will" or else she "won't,"
'Twill be the same as now;
And if she does, or if she don't,
God bless, her anyhow.

A gentleman seated in the stalls of a theater, who was afflicted with remarkably long ears, overheard the jocular remarks of a neighboring young man to another, which were by far too loudly expressed. The proprietor of the ears turned round thereat and sharply said, "It is true, my ears are very large for a man, but yours are very small for an ass."

Barbarous Surgery.

A correspondent of the British Medical Times mentions a curious and barbarous remedy for headache and other cerebral affections in vogue among the natives of the South Sea Islands. They lay open the scalp with a cross or T incision, and then scrape the skull with a piece of glass until a hole is made about the size of a crown piece. This hole is made deep enough to reach the dura mater, though sometimes an unskillful operator will continue the scraping until the pia mater is touched, when, of course, death results. In the best of hands about one-half of the patients die from the effects of the operation. This custom, from superstition and fashion, has been so prevalent that there are but few of the male adults without a hole in their cranium, or, as the Australians express it, "without a shingle." Sometimes a rude attempt is made to cover up the membranes of the brain by placing a piece of cocoanut shell under the scalp. This bone-scraping remedy is also employed in cases of rheumatism. The cuticle is incised and the center of the ulna or tibia laid bare, and the surface of the bone scraped with glass until a large portion of the internal lamina is removed.

Dr. Radcliffe, in a recent lecture, gave some very excellent advice upon the subject of brain exhaustion, so common at the present day. The symptoms are loss of memory, depression of spirits, increased or lessened sleepiness, irritability, epilepti-form condition of the nerves, and sometimes transitory coma. He recommends a moderate but not stinted diet, and a reasonable amount of work. If there is sleeplessness the head should be low, if undue sleepiness, high upon the pillow.

HOW "SWINNEY'S GANG" WAS CAUGHT;

OR

A Western Detective's Stratagem.

The Center Pacific had been completed, and now an iron railway echoed to the tread of that mighty monster, the locomotive, as it plunged madly across the prarie, but lately almost a wilderness. The telegraph had been put up, and with the Atlantic cable, we had, indeed, a girdle around the world. In short, the two great fore runners of civilization had penetrated our boundless western plains, had crossed those majestic hills of the Pacific coast, and carried their blessings to that far off State, old California.

'Message for Captain Kyle, charges paid,' cried an urchin, snapping a telegraphic despatch down on my desk, and hurrying out of the door.

I took up the envelope, broke it open and read the following:

San Francisco,—— 10th, 186—.

To COL. TOM KYLE, Broadway, N. Y. Come on here immediately. Trouble with a gang of robbers called Swinney's band. Raising 'Old Harry' hereabouts. Several hundred dollars for you when done.

BILL DAVIS, Dep. Supt. I. A.

Davis was Deputy Superintendent of the International Association for the West. I prepared to start at once.

By noon I was ready for the journey, and fairly under way.

On the train I met a gentleman just from San Francisco, who told me all about the Swinney gang and their operations. Their band numbered about seventy-five members, and were operating all over the more thinly settled portions of the State. Just before he left there the gang had stopped the train and robbed all the passengers, and took four soldiers out, and killed them, for threatening to bring the military down on them. They were all desperate men, blacklegs of the worst character, and no train or traveler was safe while the band existed.

At the first place where we stopped for dinner, I telegraphed to different officers of the Internationals to meet me with forces of our men at Cincinnati, where I would wait one day for them. I also directed to have arms, ammunition and disguises, so as to work more effectively.

I reached Cincinnati all right; and before the appointed time expired I had thirty men ready to accompany me. We had all obtained free passes, as the officers of the road were very anxious to extinguish the villains who had stopped their train; and they had further promised too add a thousand dollars too the amount already offered for the capture or death of Swinney's gang. Here, too, I received a second despatch from Bill Davis, informing me that a bank had just been broken into by the ruffians, and its stockholders had put in a a reward for their capture dead or alive.

We took the first train, every man disguised; and his weapons concealed. The whistle shrieked, the wheels revolved, then faster and faster until we were flying on our way.

We were not far from the section of the country which the gang infested. We had stopped to wood, water, and switch off for a coming train. I went into the depot, and conversed with the ticket agent. While there a despatch arrived which interested me not a little. It ran as follows:

'Swinney's gang have run the eastward bound off the track nine miles from here, and taken all the passengers prisoners. They have learned that Colonel Kyle, the detective, is coming west on the next train, and are intending to kill him. Warn the passengers on the train that it will be stopped. We got the report from Dunn the Conductor of the eastward bound train, who had just arrived, out of breath, having slipped away and come afoot all the way here.

SIMMS.'

It was twenty-six miles to C——, the place from which the despatch dated. I laid a plan of action at once. The passengers were all ordered to get out of the train, and wait in the depot until we returned. Many were armed and to those I communicated my intentions. When I disclosed my name, and they found I had a force of internationals along with me, the fear and consternation previously existing partially subsided, though all was excitement still.

I had the passenger train pulled on to the main track. Next two freight cars were coupled on each end, and the mail and baggage coach taken off. Lastly I had the freight engine put on behind the train, making two locomotives to pull us. The boxes were occupied in the ordinary way; but in addition to this each car was also chained to its fellow, so that if the pins sho'd be withdrawed, the fastenings of the train should still be completed. Now every light in the cars was extinguished and the doors left ajar for the fastenings consisted of spring locks and if closed no one could get out of it. The conductor alone knew how to set these locks so that they would not spring into position.

My boys swarmed to the top of the train leaving the freight boxes and the passenger coaches empty. Once in position each man laid flat on the roof with pistols and rifles handy. These latter weapons we had procured in the village before starting, with plenty of powder and balls.

Thus strangely did we start out—Cook, the driver of the engine in front of our train, was concealed in the tender, under the wood, and Settle, the engineer of the locomotive in our rear, was to put us through.

On we went, one of my own men standing up on the train and looking out ahead to signal when to stop. It was an intensely dark night, no lights being visible, except the head lights of the two engines, for in both cabs had the lanterns been extinguished.

We could at last faintly see lights far down the road; then all was darkness. Evidently the robbers had put them out, to prevent our taking the alarm, and going back. Still we dashed on until we thought we were pretty near the dangerous ground, then the locomotive began too puff more rapidly, we were sent over the road at a terrible rate, and the engine in our rear could have been seen leaving us. This was the plan. Settle's fireman had uncoupled the train and locomotive, and now, that huge machine was tearing along the road on the back trip.

We glided along a good way and then came to a perfect stand still. We had stopped and all was silence on that vast prarie. Suddenly there rose a yell of demoniac harshness, and the train was surrounded. Two men mounted the cab. They found it quite empty.

'Cook has sloped,' cried one. 'He smelt a mice and cut out. So much the better, for we can now take a hand in the game which will be played in the cars.'

'But why are all the lights out?' said the other as the two left the engine. 'Let's go and see, as we are not needed here, there being no engineer to guard.'

'Kyle! bring out Kyle!

'Cut his heart out!

These and other cries were heard as the band swarmed into the cars; now came shouts of inquiry:

'What are all the lights out for?'

'Strike a match and see what's up.'

'There ain't any matches in th crowd.'

'Better keep out of those cars then.'

'So say I, some of us may get shot.'

Here an authoritative voice was heard. 'Are you a pack of cowards or not? Into these cars with you and drag out every one there. I'll head you as you are afraid to go by yourselves. Come on.

It was Swinney himself who had been speaking, and immediately the gang commenced work. All but four went into the coaches and began to feel about in the darkness for the passengers. The four who had remained outside had started to get wood, intending to build fires from the lights of the locomotive.

At this juncture some of the men deputed for the purpose, sprang lightly onto the platform and shut the doors Then as quickly they clambered back to their places, the signal for Cook was given, and we were immediately under way, going at the rate of forty miles an hour on the back trip. The four men who were hunting fuel, when we began to go, came dashing towards the engine, but four rifle balls pierced their bodies, and they fell to rise no more. Soon a car door was dashed open, and the robbers began to rush out on the platform. Shot after shot sounded from the cartops, and their dead lay in a pile on the place where they had so lately stood.

Another door went down and another withering volley was poured into them.

'Back for your lives' yelled a terrified one 'Swinney is shot and we are in a trap.'

We reached our destination all right and stopped at the depot. My men retained their position.

At this moment huge fires began to blaze all around us, kindled by the people of the town, and everything was as light as day.

I now ordered the robbers to file out, one at a time. As each man reached the platform, he was compelled to walk into the depot under the cover of four rifles. Inside the building my friends received them and tied them with ropes.

Thus all were secured, each car being emptied separately. When this was over, lights were brought and we searched the coaches for skulkers. Four only were found.

Thus ended the career of a criminal who had begun his life of crime by successfully defeating the intention of justice.

Hints on House Papering.

This is the season, among good housewives, for cleaning, whitewashing, painting, papering and otherwise renovating the domicile.

After the cleaning, whitewashing and painting is accomplished, comes the process of papering the walls; but the first thing frequently to be done is the removing of the old paper. To do this successfully, wet the wall thoroughly, and when well soaked the old paper can be stripped off very quickly. After the paper is removed wash the wall to get off all the particles of paper which may remain, and leave the walls till nearly dry, before commencing to lay on the paper. If the walls have been whitewashed instead of papered, wash the walls with vinegar which will make the paste and paper adhere more securely.

A bench is easily made for measuring and cutting the paper by placing boards of suitable length across two flour barrels. The paper should be unrolled and cut to proper length and in sufficient quantity to cover the room before the pasting process commences. These sheets should be laid face down one over the other to be ready at hand when the paster is ready to begin work.

The liability of turning the edges or damaging the paper will be greatly obviated by adopting this course.

Flour paste is the usual article for this purpose and rye flour is considered better than wheat as it has more adhesion. Mix the flour thoroughly by stirring, until the paste has a thin creamy consistence and then boil when it will thicken according to the length of time it is submitted to the heat. If found too thick in cooling add boiling water till the desired degree of thickness is obtained, then add a little carbolic acid to prevent the paste from souring or getting mouldy. A broad whitewash brush is the best to apply the paste with, and the paper should be laid on quickly after pasting to prevent its becoming too soft and tender to handle.

Two persons are required to lay on paper with rapidity, one to paste and one to apply the paper. When the paper is pasted it should be handed to the person on the ladder who holds it about a foot from the top end and lays it evenly along the wall at the top, allowing the upper end to hang over on the back of the hands. By looking down the wall it may be seen when it matches the previously laid length, and after adjusting to match it should then be brought gently to the wall, the backs of the hands then pressed gently against the wall and passed upwards against the ceiling, spreading them out towards the corners of the length of paper.

The closed scissors are then run along at the juncture of the wall and ceiling, making a mark which can be easily seen, when the top of the paper is removed to a little distance and is then cut off even and replaced.

Then take a soft clean cloth or small hand broom is gently passed downwards, and the paper pressed against the wall to the bottom, where it is cut off as at the top.

Our enterprising druggists Davenport & Co., have recently fitted up their wall paper room in good style and have added to their stock over 2,000 rolls of wall papers. All new and desirable patterns rangeing in prices from 10c to $1 per bolt. They trim free of charge, all their papers and sell them as low as any retail house in the State.

BINLEY AND "46."

BY BRET HARTE.

Upon Wasatch's peak of snow,
Night holds illimitable sway,
Where but a single hour ago
The crags and chasms, high and low,
Resplendent shone with day.

From out the sky no star-ray shines
Upon the awful solitude;
While moaning through the tossing pines,
Like some unquiet spirit's brood,
The winds sweep to and fro,
And seem in saddened mood
To breathe a wail of woe.

At first they only sighed,
But now they moan and sob
And since the eventide
Their maddened pulses throb
In quicker, faster flow,
As their fleeting footsteps glide
O'er the cold expanse of snow.

And all the upper air
Is filled with drifting clouds,
While fiends that revel there
Are weaving shifting shrouds;
Tossing, in endless whirl,
They reel in goblin mirth,
And then the shrouds they hurl
On tempest's wings to earth.

* * * * * * * *

'Twas 'leven o'clock near Bridger's Gap,
In a station that rocked in the tempest sweep,
When a lightning-jerker enjoyed his nap,
When a call from the Canyon broke his sleep,
And he caught the words from the rattle clicks,
"Send Binley down here with '46."

Soon Binley had mounted his iron steed,
And the fires of the furnace glowed again,
As the ponderous monster devoured its feed,
And rolled, from the side-track on to the main.
Out on the night where the snow-flakes fall—
Out where the blasts of the tempests roar—
Binley shouted his friend farewell,
As he opened the throttle-valve one notch more.

Then over the winding track he sped,
Where the pathway with chasms and crags was lined!
The glare of his great light gleamed ahead,
And the snow like a bride's veil streamed behind,
And soon the sound of the clanking steel
Was drowned in the echoes from hill to hill;
He felt the engine sway and reel,
But the throttle went one notch farther still.

And down the grade like a courser fleet,
Plunged through mountains of drifted snow,
The engine plows through the crusts of sleet,
And hurls a thousand feet below
The ponderous masses that block its way;
Throws them far to the left and right,
Into the black, oblivious night,
To reach the canyons by break of day.

And now old Binley feels the thrill
That the soldier feels when he meets his foe;
He opens the throttle-vavle wider still,
And his furnace burns with a fiercer glow,
As the piston flashes in faster stroke;
But firm as a rock stands the engineer,
And in his honest old heart of oak
There beats not the slightest pulse of fear.

But soon the engine is running slower,
Though its pathway lies on a level grade;
And then a tremor comes stealing o'er
Binley's hand on the throttle laid.
There's a slacking up of the driving-wheel,
While the engine struggles with human will;
Then slowly ceases the clink of steel,
And the panting monster is standing still,

Thicker and faster the drifting snow
Throws round its victim its winding sheet,
And quenches the glare of the headlight's glow,
As Binley mutters, "I give up beat."

* * * * * * * *

Next morning a snow-plow forced its way
To the spot where the buried engine lay;
They hewed a path through the frozen crust,
And then was the ghastly story told;
There sat Binley beside his trust,
With his hand on the throttle-valve, stiff and cold.

—Frank Leslie's Weekly.

JOHN'S CHOICE.

Peter Jansen was a wealthy and eccentric New England farmer, the owner in fee simple of many broad and fertile acres of available land, and the proud parent of a promising son, now near grown, who in his infancy had been designated by the not altogether unheard-of name of John.

Now, John Jansen had been brought up in a very careful and proper manner, and it was therefore not to be wondered that as he grew more mature, he was regarded as a very exemplary young man by those who knew him intimately. He was sober and industrious in his habits, cultivated and refined in his tastes, with disposition to get along and prosper in the world, as his father had done before him.

But the time came when he was one and twenty. This is a remarkable episode in the lives of most young men, when fully freed from parental restraint by the construction of the law, they think they know so much, and subsequently learn that they know so little.

Now, possibly, Peter, the pere, regarded this event in his son's life with as great concern as did John the junior; for certain it is, that shortly thereafter he summoned the young man into his presence for a little private conversation.

"Well, John," he said, "how does it seem to be one and twenty?"

"Seem! why I can't see as it seems any different from any other time."'

"Can't, eh? Oh, well, you'll see quick enough, I guess. I suppose the next thing you'll be thinking of will be getting married."

"Oh, I hadn't thought of such a thing yet in earnest."

"Hadn't eh? Well, you'd better be thinking; getting married is about as important thing as'll ever happen to you."

"Yes, I suppose so."

"Suppose so? suppose so? you'll know so by-and-by. Well, John, you are old enough to begin to think seriously about this matter. I ain't going to have you running around unsettled and unsteady in your habits and character. Now, the quicker you pick yourself out a wife and settle down the better. Mind you, my boy, this wasting three or four of the best years of your life in sowing your wild oats, is a very foolish principle for young men to adhere to. Now, I don't propose to have you do anything of the kind, and if you avoid it you won't have a harvest of briars and thistles to gather in afterward. Now, just as soon as you will pick yourself out a good, prudent and industrious little wife, I've a good farm to give you, and enough to set you up in reasonable style, you understand!"

"Yes, sir."

"But not an acre or a penny of mine shall you possess until you have complied with my wishes."

"But, father——"

"I mean what I say, exactly, and no more; make this matter your first business, and when you have performed your part of the contract, I will attend to mine."

"But is this rather sudden."

"That makes no difference; if you are not satisfied with my terms, the world is wide enough for both of us; you are big enough and bright enough to earn your own living; if you can do better by yourself than I can do by you, why, start right out in the world, for you are of age. I have stated my terms, and do not propose to altar them."

"But who shall I marry?"

"There's Israel Ive's five daughters, and I'm certain you can have your pick out of the lot. They've all been well brought up, and any one of them is good enough for you, so go ahead, and as soon as you report favorably the farm is yours."

"But which one shall I take, father?"

"Which one shall you take?" repeated Peter Jansen; "it must be a bright man, surely, that cannot decide at sight what women to pick out of a dozen, and a singular youth you are not to have your eye on one already. However, make your own choice, and you'll be happier, live longer, and prosper better in your domestic affairs generally."

With these concluding remarks the fond father turned away, and John was left alone to his reflections.

Now, John Jansen was not a verdant young man; he had seen considerable of the world for a person of his age and circumstances, but he was very diffident and bashful. It was this quality of his disposition that made him so adverse to ladies' society, and had occasioned no little anxiety to old Peter, who had already begun to fear that John would be a confirmed bachelor, hence his desire to kindly assist John's matrimonial matters along.

For some moments after his father's exit, John sat profoundly thinking; he believed he did have an inexpressible sort of tenderness for the youngest daughter of Israel Ives. If not strictly beautiful, she was at least a very sensible girl, and would make a practical housekeeper. John had but little sentiment in his composition; his tastes were more matter-of-fact. The more John thought of matrimony, the more fixed became his determination of committing himself as soon as possible.

A night or two subsequent to the conversation with his father, it was noticed that he attired himself with unusual care before going out, as he insisted, to attend the "debating society." His father and mother regarded each other significantly, as if they well understood what was uppermost in John's mind, but they gave the young man no intimation that they suspected his intentions.

After a last lingering look at the looking-glass, John started forth into the darkness, taking the shortest road possible to the residence of Israel Ives.

He soon came to the place he intended visiting. A bright light gleamed out through the front windows, with welcoming beams, and he fancied he could see smiling faces there; yet his heart thumped so very singularly under his shining satin vest that it was several minutes before he could make up his mind to knock at the door; he walked up and down the road past the place several times, to calm himself, and to think over the words he proposed saying when in the presence of Miss Ives.

At last he turned in at the gate, and walking boldly up to the front door, he made his presence suddenly known to the Ives family by means of the friendly assistance of the heavy brass knocker.

Israel Ives came to the door with a flaring candle in his hand; he gave a sudden little start of surprise upon recognizing his visitor.

"Why, John," he said, "Is this you?"

"Is Miss Ives at home?" said John, nervously, forgetting in his sudden embarrassment to designate the particular Miss Ives he wished to see.

"Certainly, certainly," replied Israel, smiling mischievously; "walk right into the parlor and sit down, and she will come in presently."

Leaving his hat upon the rack in the hall, John did as he was bid; he sat down upon the outer edge of the chair and awaited the young lady's coming. He heard several suppressed giggles in the adjoining room, and a suggestion upon the part of Israel that they had best not to act silly and foolish. Then the door opened and in sailed Miss Sophrony Ives, followed by Patience, Malvina and Lucy Ives, each simultaneously smiling and trying to look as sweet and pretty as possible. They advanced one by one and gave John a greeting, after which they arranged themselves in a graceful group about him; then began the liveliest conversation John had ever listened to. He began to grow uneasy and lose his self-possession. This was rather more Miss Iveses than he had anticipated meeting.

At last a sudden idea occurred to him.

"Girls," he said, "do any of you play blind man's buff?"

The young ladies all suddenly giggled.

"Sometimes," said Miss Sophrony, with a sly glance at her sisters.

"Suppose we have a game, then," said John, earnestly.

Several handkerchiefs were simultaneously produced, and before John was aware he was in midnight darkness.

"But you must be blinded, too, Lucy," said Mis Malvina; "it always makes it livelier to have two, you know."

So Miss Lucy's sight was temporarily obscured in the same manner that John's had been.

Then the word "ready" was given, and without a word of warning, Sophrony, Patience, Priscilla and Malvina noiselessly glided from the room.

For awhile John and Lucy groped innocently about them, each failing to find the objects they sought. At last John spoke:

"I say, where are you all?" he said, helplessly.

No answer came to his question from those he was seeking.

"John," said Lucy, "I believe they're all hiding."

Just at that moment the two approached each other with their hands extended, and they were each suddenly clasped in each other's arms. This was a sensation so new to John that it almost deprived him of his articulation.

"Oh, is it you, John?" said Lucy; "I do believe they're fooling us."

She suddenly removed the bandage from her eyes, and the next moment John felt her deft little fingers untying the knot in the handkerchief that was bound about his head.

"Look here, John," she said, in a half-provoked sort of way; "just see what a trick they've played upon us. I might have known what they were up to. Never mind, we'll have a real pleasant visit now."

They sat down side by side on the high-backed sofa, and Lucy talked so pleasantly and encouragingly to John that he soon felt perfectly at home. He was almost astonished at his self-possession. The minutes lengthened into hours, and—well, he could never fully explain how it was afterward, but the fact was, that Lucy promised him that she would be Mrs. John Jansen whenever he was ready to claim her as his own, and John went home that night very proud and happy, and on the following morning he informed his astonished father that any time that farm was ready, he would be ready to go to housekeeping.

Peter Jansen kept his word, and John was often subsequently heard to say that if it hadn't been for that friendly game of blind man's buff, he would hardly have known how to have made a choice.

THE PLOW.

The plow is, par excellence, the emblem of agriculture, and its history, both authentic and mythological, possesses a peculiar interest. The period at which man first began to comminute the soil for the purpose of making it produce sustenance for himself and his flocks is so remote as to be lost in the obscurity of the past; but that it was at an early period is clear. It is also generally admitted that the ox and cow were in this age used as native farmers, and it is asserted that men and women captured in war and reduced to slavery were employed in this way before the ox was trained or the cow became accustomed to the yoke; for war and its offspring, slavery, are older than agriculture.

The earliest plow was a pointed stick, which the primitive man used to break up the soil. This was a slow and laborious process, and one day the thought came to one wiser than his fellows that the forked limb of a tree might be made efficient for this purpose. Acting upon this thought, he formed a plow by cutting a forked limb from a tree and sharpening one of the prongs, so that it would penetrate the soil. It took two persons to use this implement—one to draw it, which he did by a bark or rawhide trace, and one to hold and push it into the ground. This, the first plow, proved a great success, and was for a while thought to be the ne plus ultra of improvement in that line. In the course of time, however, some ingenious laborer began to question the perfection of this implement, and finding a limb of somewhat different shape, he constructed an improved plow. The old fogies shook their heads and muttered "humbug," but the progressive men adopted it, and it ultimately superseded the earlier devices. Ages went by before the forked stick plow was succeeded by another, composed of several pieces of wood held together by mortises and pins. This was improved from time to time, until it approached as near perfection as it was possible for a plow composed wholly of wood.

The Romans were probably the first to use iron in the construction of the plow. The plow that Cincinnatus followed was a rude affair, with no iron in it except the point and share. The Greeks have a myth which is interesting in this connection. Proserpine, a daughter of Ceres (goddess of agriculture), was abducted by Pluto while she was in the forest gathering flowers, and was installed as queen of the lower regions. Ceres, inconsolable at the loss of her daughter, wholly neglected the agricultural interests in her search for the missing goddess. The result was that the whole earth eventually became a barren waste. Jupiter and the other gods implored her to return to Olympus and resume her duties as guardian of agriculture, but in vain. She could think of nothing except her lost daughter. Jupiter now visited Pluto and persuaded him to permit Proserpine to revisit the earth and remain eight months each year, and then return and spend the other four with him. Ceres consented to this arrangement, and at once returned to Olympus. Before going, however, she instructed Triptolemus of Eleusis in the art of agriculture, and giving him her own chariot, drawn by dragons, commanded him to travel over the whole earth and distribute seed corn to its inhabitants. Triptolemus was the inventor of the plow. The Greeks held two feasts a year in his honor, one on account of the distribution of seed and the other because he invented the plow, without which the seed would have been of little use.

Little improvement seems to have been made in the plow used by the Greeks and Romans for over two thousand years, and indeed it was a most clumsy affair, as recently as fifty years ago being only a wedge, clearing the soil and compressing the subsoil.

It may be predicted that before many years, some Yankee Triptolemus will revolutionize the plow by constructing one that shall combine the functions of both the plow and the harrow, and possibly other and valuable adjuncts not now anticipated. With all due respect to the great plowmakers, it must be admitted that the mechanical idea embodied in the plow as now constructed is imperfect, and it is time this was recognized and correct principles incorporated in its construction, that it might meet the demands of this progressive and utilitarian age. Some attempts in this direction have already been made, but they, like all first attempts to embody a new idea, have been only partially successful. It is a recognized axiom of modern times, that "American genius and perseverance know no such word as failure," and it is confidently expected that success in this department of mechanical invention will soon be achieved.

Two Boston Neighbors.—The Boston Traveller, of Saturday, relates the following: "A gentleman and lady, strangers to each other, occupied the same seat in a railroad car on a train in Ohio, bound East. Various subjects were discussed. It soon appeared that both were residents of Boston and were returning to their respective homes. On the arrival of the train in Boston the gent procured a carriage, into which both lady and gent entered. 'Where do you go?' asked the hackman. The gent replied at No. 12 —— street. 'You may leave me at the same place,' said the lady. The gentleman had all kinds of surmises, and could not understand why she was to be left at his house. The carriage arrived at No. 12, the gentleman still in a quandary. Trunk and valise were taken off and set down. It turned out that the lady resided at No. 14 same street, and the two entrances were not three feet apart. Both parties had resided for several years in adjoining houses, and had met for the first time 500 miles from their homes."

Its managers report a saving in operating expenses over the broad gauge of 35 per cent., and a saving in construction and equipment of 37½ per cent. on what a broad gauge would have cost.

According to the decennial United States census taken in 1870, the annual production of Pennsylvania was $2,000,000,000, a sum exceeding the wealth of the entire South. Three years of remarkable progress have now elapsed since that census was taken, and the old Keystone State has gone on steadily the same as before, increasing her railroads, her mining and manufacturing investments, her agriculture and her general production. The ratio of production in 1870 was $600 per head of the population. But this ratio is a constantly increasing one, and in 1880 the production is very likely to reach $3,000,000,000 per annum.

It was an ancient custom of the Spartans, in order to inculcate among their youth an abhorrence of intemperance and its kindred vices, to make their slaves drunk with wine in the public market-places, so that the rising generation, upon whom would some day devolve the honor and safety of the Lacedemonian Republic, might see before them all the ghastly details of the drunkard's disgrace, his loss of reason and of physical strength. 'Twere well, perhaps, to-day, could some of our young men contemplate a similar instructive lesson drawn from the life, showing them, by a sharply drawn contrast, the advantages and true loveliness of abstinence and virtue.

For such as appreciate these, Vinegar Bitters is the beverage best adapted, it being a purely vegetable draught, devoid of alcohol or mineral poisons, and possessing all the virtues, but none of the damning curses, of the different poisons which year by year are sweeping away thousands of dollars and lives. 42

The Invalid—A Pen Picture.

See her pallid countenance, but a short time ago the picture of ruddy health, the envy of the school and the pride of the household. She was always welcomed by her schoolmates, for her lithe form and pleasing disposition carried cheerfulness into their ranks. Diligent, punctual and exemplary, obedient and graceful at home, she won the hearts of all. But, alas, we are sorrowed. Those rosy cheeks and ruddy lips are blanched by Consumption. The voice once so enchanting in laugh and song is feeble, husky and supplanted by a hollow cough. Let us approach her couch gently and take her hand. Do not shudder because of the feeble and passionless grasp. The hand once so hearty and plump is emaciated and shows bony outlines, while the cords and tortuous veins are plainly mapped upon the surface. The pulse that bounded with repletion, carrying vigor to the whole system, and imparting life, beauty, vivacity, health and strength, is delicate to the touch. The feeble heart cannot propel the thin, scanty blood with force. Must we lose her while yet in her teens? Companions and friends gather around with words of cheer and consolation, and depart with moistened eyes and silent steps. Must we lose her? No! there is relief! We can stay this destroyer of our happiness and not suffer the loss of so bright a gem. Something more is required now than dietary and hygienic observance, for nature calls for aid and she shall have it. Take this pleasant medicine. It is invigorating. How it allays the irritable cough, improves the appetite and digestion, and sends a healthy tingle through the frame. The blood is enriched, nervous force increased, and the heart bounds with a new impulse. See her face brighten by degrees; the color is returning, her voice is getting clearer, and pleasant words are spoken. The strength falters yet, but is gaining. Let us take her out in the warm sunshine. In a short time she will be able to go without our aid, a cheerful girl. This delightful medicine must be God-blessed. It is restoring health to our loved one. She is emerging from her sickness sweeter and nobler than before, and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery must have the credit. It has raised her.

Facts Worth Remembering.

Gout.—An English medical writer states that rheumatism and gout can be cured by the free use of asparagus.

To Bend Glass.—Fill glass tubes with fine dry sand, close at both ends, and they will bend easily after heating.

Warm Feet.—The New York Sun says that a handful of sawdust worn in each stocking will keep the feet as warm as toast.

Frosted Feet.—They may be cured as follows: White oak bark, taken fresh and boiled in water for a strong liquor. Bathe the feet in the liquor. It is pronounced the best of all remedies.

Windows.—Ventilation would be more easily accomplished and more certainly performed, and rooms kept with purer and healthier air, if windows were made to slide easily. If not hung by pulleys and weights, let a carpenter add good freely-working catches. Never permit a broken pane in the house.

Cellars.—Cellars should be kept constantly clean, as much so as your parlor. It is the easiest thing in the world, if you attend to it daily, and only becomes a heavy task when you allow a month's accumulations to remain undisturbed. It is hardly necessary to add that fevers have been contracted boy breathing the miasma created in an ill-kept cellar.

Colds.—Hot lemonade is one of the best remedies in the world for a cold. It acts promptly and effectively, and has no unpleasant after effects. One lemon properly squeezed, cut in slices, put with sugar, and covered with half a pint of boiling water. Drink just before going to bed, and do not expose yourself on the following day. This remedy will ward off an attack of the chills and fever, if used promptly.

Doors.—Never allow a door to creak for want of oil, or to shut so hard as to require slamming to make it latch. For this purpose pass round once a week at some regular time, say Saturday evening or Monday morning, with a drop of oil on a feather, or on the tip of the finger, and give every rubbing part, latch, hinge, etc., a touch. Scissors, which are inclined to work hard, can also be greatly improved in this way.

The Southern Floods.

Extract from a letter dated New Orleans, May 8:

"The Governor and Relief Committee receive letters daily from the overflowed parishes, giving details of the condition of the inhabitants. Recent letters from Catakoula, Caldwell, Franklin, Ouachita, Rapides and Tensas parishes, show no improvement, but indicate additional affliction by sickness. From the great mass of correspondence, the following is selected as showing substantially the purport of the whole: Mr. Reddock, writing from Cuba, Ouachita parish says:

"'All the country for miles around is submerged. Twelve farms are almost entirely under water, within three miles of this place, with a population of 700 persons, from the breaking of the Cuba levee. The levee broke on April 8, and the current of water was so strong that it washed away everything on my lot except my dwelling-house and store-house. My corn-house and oxen are all gone. The water in my dwelling is four feet deep, and rushes through in such a current as to make it tremble like a leaf. But do not look to me alone. There are 600 or 700 others similarly situated within three miles. W. J. Ellis has lost everything. The water on the floor of his dwelling is five feet deep, and he has not one pound of provisions on hand for himself and 15 freedmen, and no chance of getting any in the neighborhood.'

"Dr. R. C. Burch, writing from Boscobel plantation, Ouachita parish, says there are 3,000 people within the limit of his practice, many of whom are suffering from sickness caused by exposure on account of the overflow. He is unable to supply the demand for medicine, and asks that medicine be forwarded, offering to distribute it to the sick and suffering."

A letter from Memphis of the same date says:

"S. Johnson, a planter from Chicot county, Arkansas, arrived here this morning. He brings distressing accounts of the suffering among the laborers and their families in that vicinity. Many of them, he says, have subsisted for several days upon the carcasses of cattle that have died from starvation or been drowned in the overflow.

A San Diego editor says that at the risk of being pronounced a falsifier by Eastern people, he will state a few facts illustrating the fertility of Southern California. He had seen a mass of wheat, the product of a single grain, on which he counted 119 stalks. It was taken from the ground before being allowed to mature, otherwise each stock would have borne at least sixty grains, being a yield of over 7,000 grains from one. Two years ago a Mr. Kimball planted some olive cuttings, which have become thrifty trees, the height of a man. Bees filled an empty hogshead in a backyard with honey, and the alfalfa-fed cows yield milk enough to fulfill the scriptural requirements of a promised land.

The Ruling Passion Strong in Death.—A reformed gambler was about to die, and sent for a minister, when the following conversation occurred:

"Pastor, do you think I am near death?"

"I regret to say I believe you are."

"Do you think, since I am converted, I will go to heaven?"

"I do."

"Do you expect to go there, too?"

"Yes, I believe I will."

"Well, we'll be angels, won't we, and have wings to fly with?"

"Yes, I am sure we'll be like angels."

"Well, then," said the dying man, "I'll bet you five dollars I will beat you flying."

Chilblains.—Bathe the feet for half an hour in water as hot as can be borne; add hot water after the feet have been in a few moments, as they will bear more than the first. Let the water be as hot when the feet are removed as when put in. This draws the inflammation out and allays the itching which is so very painful. Dry with a cloth; then bathe well with hemlock oil, (which can be got at any druggist's at a trifling cost); dry it by the fire. Repeat the application three or four nights if needed. Care should be taken not to chill the feet immediately.

Wheat-Growing in Nebraska.

This State is now attracting considerable attention as one of the best fields for settlement in the Union. In climate and soil it meets the conditions required for the successful cultivation of all the productions of the temperate zone, and also some of the sub-tropical.

It is not often that corn and wheat thrive equally well in any country; but as it is in Nebraska, corn is the first staple crop, of course; but as soon as the farmer is well settled upon the land, he puts in wheat. The wheat of Nebraska is in good favor; and in St. Louis and Chicago markets its price averages several cents per bushel more than the wheat of the neighboring States can command. In bread-making qualities the wheat of Nebraska only ranks second to that of California, with which it does not come into competition.

The agricultural triumphs which have been achieved in Nebraska are the work of little more than ten years, and, as the country is settled, and the position of the farmer becomes easier, wheat ranks higher among the crops of the country. In 1860, when the population was 28,000, the wheat crop amounted to 147,867 bushels, or about 5¼ bushels per head; and, in 1870, when the population was 122,000, the wheat crop was 2,125,086 bushels, or a little under 17¼ bushels per head.

The population of 1873 can only be estimated, and therefore it is best not given; but the wheat crop of that year (an unfavorable agricultural year) amounted to 3,000,000 bushels. The record is therefore still one of advancement for the young State; and it is to be remembered that stock-raising, fruit-culture, corn-growing, and all other agricultural work advances equally with wheat-raising. Nebraska is therefore a promising State for the settler; and the more especially since it has good markets both east and west and south. —Nebraska paper.

A Japanese Normal School.

The Normal School at Tokei was established in order to obtain a supply of properly trained teachers for new graded schools, which according to the scheme of the education department, are to number over 50,000. It was begun in the following manner: A class of twenty-five picked young men was formed, and began the study of English. They were fresh and unspoiled, and learned with great rapidity. At a certain point, as soon as they could understand the ordinary expressions of their foreign instructor, the study of English was dropped. They had been taught so far, simply for the purpose of becoming familiar with the manner in which a foreign teacher instructs a class, and maintains discipline. It was something very different from what they had been accustomed to. In Japanese schools, a teacher usually takes a class of six or less, and instructs each scholar separately. They know nothing of reciting in concert, and the discipline in a large school is, in respect of noise and irregular attendance, about equal to that of the very worst country schools at home. As soon as these young men had learned how a class in a foreign school is taught and managed, little children were brought in, formed into classes, and the young men set to teach them. This they did in the presence, under the eye and by the aid of their foreign instructor. The latter did not know the Japanese, nor did he need it. At present there are 450 young men from all sections of the Empire, in training to be teachers.—Cor. Yale Courant.

Which Breed of Poultry Eats Most?

On Sept. 1, an Ohio poultry keeper took ten pullets of each of the breeds mentioned below, about six months old, gave them a yard forty feet square, with a comfortable house, and kept exact account of eggs and feed, as follows:

The Dark Brahmas ate 369 quarts of corn, oats and wheat screening, laid 605 eggs, and weighed 70 pounds. The Buff Cochins ate 406 quarts, laid 591 eggs, and weighed 73 pounds. The Gray Dorkings ate 309¼ quarts, laid 524 eggs, and weighed 59½ pounds. The Houdans ate 214¼ quarts, laid 763 eggs, and weighed 45½ pounds. The Leghorns ate 321 1-5 quarts, laid 807 eggs, and weighed 36½ pounds.

To make this experiment more complete, and to show which lot gave the most profit, including both eggs and flesh, we have supposed the fowls to be dressed and sold at the end of six months at 20 cents per pound; also that the eggs are worth 24 cents per dozen (two cents each), and that the cost of the feed was 2½ cents per quart, or 50 cents per bushel. The figures would then be:

	Cost of feed.	Value eggs.	Value meat.	Total value.	Total profit.
Brahmas........	$9 22	$12 10	$14 00	$26 10	$18 28
Cochins	10 15	11 82	14 16	24 42	16 29
Dorkings.......	7 72	10 48	11 90	22 38	14 36
Houdans	7 35	15 66	9 10	24 76	19 81
Leghorns....	5 77	16 14	7 30	23 44	17 07

The greatest profit on the investment is thus in favor of the Houdans, with the Leghorn next, and the Dorking least.

The Cremation Propaganda.

A German correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette writes: "The cause of cremation is making further progress. The furnace intended for the experimental burning of the dead, now building in Dresden, is to be completed in a few weeks. Meanwhile a Cremation Society has formed at Vienna, under the appropriate title of 'The Urn,' and has obtained the Government's consent for instituting similar experiments. The furnace to be built in Vienna will be after the design of Prof. Reclam, of Leipzig. 'The Urn' has a goodly roll of members to show already, and every day is said to witness additions. In Zurich, Swiss papers affirm, cremation is more spoken of and excites greater attention and zeal than even the proposed revision of the Federal Constitution, on which a vote is about to be taken shortly."

The Cuban Revolution.—A decree is to be promulgated in Cuba authorizing the introduction of 30,000 negroes from Africa, under contract like the Chinese, the purpose being to supply the island with the necessary number of field hands; thus satisfying the planters, and at the same time drawing the necessary number of blacks from the plantations with which to fill up the army and keep the revolutionists in check, if possible. Concha, the new Captain-General, has announced his intention to burn every house and tree in the central and eastern departments, making that half of the island a wilderness rather than submit to the revolution any longer.

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelminitics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

◆

The World claims that William W. Eaton, of Connecticut, is a Hard-money, Free-trade and Home-rule Democrat. If we only knew how he stood on the question of wooden nutmegs now we would feel easier.

◆

Mr Watterson, who is sojourning in Washington, has discovered, between his sherry and champagne, that Grant is actually a candidate for re-election. Now let the howl of Cæsarism ascend to heaven.

◆

Governor Baxter, of Arkansas, is a man of iron constitution, of indomitable pluck, and is possessed of a buoyancy of spirits which nothing can quench. After all the fiery tribulations he has lately passed through, he suggests that Arkansas have a Constitutional Convention.

◆

Young Sartoris, says a correspondent, who is soon to take the lily-white hand of Mrs. Grant's daughter, and lead her over the water, is pronounced a clever fellow by all. Manly and good-natured, he circulates among the jolly boys of the city, and knows as little how to be a snob as any gentleman in this or other lands. Only pleasant words are heard of him, even from the sore-hearted swains who hoped to stand where he will stand on the 21st inst.

◆

Would you be surprised to hear that the government had been involved a great many millions in Jay Cook's Northern Pacific? It is asserted, on very trustworthy authority, that the bonds of the Northern Pacific will yet find redemption in government bills, and that was one purpose of the inflation battle during the winter. In that time Jay Cook will emerge from the deeps of bankruptcy.

◆

Meanwhile, Butler has gone to bed sick. For the first time in years, he finds that eighteen hours of laborious sin each day, and six hours of troubled sleep, demand forfeit. He has really been dangerously near the shore of the black river, and is a long way from being a well man yet. He may in a spasm of self-reliance fling physic at the prescriber's head, and reel into the Capitol next week. But his physicians claim that he belongs in his chamber for a fortnight longer at least.

◆

It takes a long time to unlock certain fountains in the human anatomy. It is seven or eight years since the rebellion ended, and the blood thirsty chaps who control the destinies of the Grand Army of the Republic at Washington, stiffly refuse to drop a spray or blossom on the rebel graves decoration day. The chaps who rule in this business are generally the warriors who remained in the rear during active operations.

◆

That roaring comedian, John Cochrane, held a consultation with himself in Albany yesterday or rather, from Wednesday evening six o'clock until Thursday one o'clock—it's well to be precise in momentous affairs of this sort. John argued that he couldn't afford to merge the liberal republican party with the Grant folks. He agreed unanimously that the late victory of the liberals in the state wherein such candidates on the two ticket as had the good fortune to receive the liberal support were elected,—warranted him in holding a separate orgaization and calling a convention when ever he feels "disposed." Great harmony prevailed in the consultation, and John edified the assemblage with his famous legend of the prarie hens singing for Greeley.

The latest advices touching the Arkansas imbroglio are that Baxter telegraphs the President that it is not proper for the Legislature to adjourn, except from day to day, until there is a quorum present; that when a quorum is assembled he is willing that the Legislature adjourn according to the President's suggestion until the adherents of Brooks among the members can all appear in the body; that, meanwhile, it is proper that Brooks retire as far from the State-house on one side as he is on the other; disperse his troops and deposit the arms in his possession in the State Arsenal. The President telegraphs Brooks that this is an equitable proposition, and recommends his immediate acceptance thereof.

General Grant "allows" that Richardson is a thorn in the flesh. He has asked all sorts of chaps to take the treasury; and the mischief is that those who are best fitted have the White House fever and are afraid of hurting their chances. It is said, on what seems credible authority, that Schenk and Washburne have both had the refusal of the place and both respectfully don't see it. In this fix the president hasn't much choice. He can't very well appoint Tom Murphy or his brother Orvilie, because those illustrious patriots know even less about finances than the unfortunate Richardson. This poor man is coming to grief in the house of his friends.

It will be remembered that Governor Dix, of New York, sent a special message to the Legislature remonstrating against the passage by Congress of the Currency Bill, because it was going to make money too cheap and plenty.

Well, we know of one place where money doesn't appear to be plenty and that is in the Treasury of Governor Dix's State. The Albany Times says that there is not a dollar in the Treasury that can be lawfully applied to the payment of the late appropriations.

Public creditors have got to wait until this year's taxes are collected. It is from the politicians of this State that we have such severe lectures on financial topics.

◆

Great Britain is about to have some unpleasant experience of the enlightened people of Spanish Central and South America. Mr. Magee, vice-Counsel at San Jose, Guatemala, recently became involved in a personal difficulty with the Spanish commandant of the place and blows were exchanged. Magee was afterwards summoned to the presence of the bloodthirsty officer who shamefully abused him, using the vilest and the most obscene language. He ended by knocking him down with the butt end of his heavy pistol. The unfortunate Consul was then thrown into prison and informed that he would be first scourged and then shot. He was accordingly brought out and stripped and bound and two hundred lashes administered. He then fainted and a respite was ordered. The fiend who had ordered all this punishment had not the slightest authority for his course. He carried his devilish animosity to the length of visiting the mangled prisoner in his cell and taunted and insulted him without stint. Magee was finally brought out for the remainder of the penalty, but at that moment a detachment of troops from Salvador came to the rescue. Gonzales, who had ordered the punishment of Magee, attempted to escape to the Arizona, then lying in the harbor, but was shot dead as he attempted to scale her side, by indignant passengers on board. Some time previously to these occurrences, the she steamer Tacna was wrecked on the coast of Chili, and her commanding officer, Captain Hyde, who escaped, was arrested and thrown into prison. His release has been demanded together with a penalty of $25,000 by the British Minister. It is rumored that a British squadron of war has been ordered to Valparaiso, possibly to emphasize the demand. Such treatment of foreign citizens when in the plain discharge of their duties is a grave offence against international courtesy, and should subject the offending power to the severest censure. The case of Magee is sufficiently exasperating to warrant a declaration of war. It is simply astounding that a people whose civilization is as ancient as that of the Spanish should still furnish so many examples of fiendish and unnatural bloodthirstiness. The Pizarros and Alvas are by no means extinct.

The Arkansas Legislature having recognized Baxter as the Governor of that State, nothing remained for the President to do but to file a notice on Brooks to vacate the State-house and to warn all the turbulent persons who may have combined to resist his (Baxter's) authority to disband, go home and submit to the laws within ten days or be punished. This the President has done in a proclamation which has been telegraphed to Brooks. As Brooks and his negroes are not likely to be excessively sanguine concerning their ability to rape a Governorship in open opposition to all the land forces of the United States, it is probable that they will presently return to more honorable employment. The opinion of the Attorney-General in a concise review of the Arkansas case, and clearly vindicates Baxter's title to the Governorship. As the highest court to jurisdiction in the premises, the Legislature, has decided the question in Baxter's favor, it becomes the plain duty of the Federal Government to speedily suppress the "domestic violence" which makes the decision futile. That Government will do this is not doubted. The General Government may not capriciously rule Governors in and out, but may and must protect the Legislature of Arkansas from disorderly and violent persons. It is a a relief to know that the Arkansas imbroglio is practically settled.

There is some plausibility in the argument attributed to members of Congress from the South for voting against the centennial $3,000,000 appropriation. It is said they held that to make the great celebration consistent general and complete amnesty should precede the jubilee. The idea of the centennial is the unity, the perfection of the great national republic. A far sublimer thought than this celebration was that of reconcilation and amnesty preached by Horace Greeley. The realization of that idea is necessary to the harmony of centennial songs While one citizen of the republic is under disability for causes which have been declaratively removed by the establishment of peace, the triumph of 1876 cannot be complete. And it is not strange that those who feel the discord should refuse to sing. It is not to be expected will also be the millenial era, that social and political conditions will have reached absolute perfection. But from present appearances it will be necessary to hurry up several little adjustments in order to give the orators of 1876 a clear field. There are at least three States along the Mississippi which require doctoring, more or less. South Carolina is now in a state of mind to sympathize with the centennial hilarity, and the grand idea of peace which relinguishes animosity and decks the graves of even rebellious heroes has not yet prevailed. Two years is not a wide margin to get the national house in order for such a triumph as is contemplated.

◆

It is proposed that when leafy June brings around its twenty-second day the members of both houses of congress shall fold their tents like the Arabs and silently steal away. A motion to that effect was, as it were, reported from the republican caucus and ordered to be printed, for fear the members would as the playbills say, forget the date, in the Senate yesterday.

TO THE DELINQUENT TAX PAYERS OF DeKALB CO. IND.

Be it known that the delinquent list from the tax duplicate of 1873, is now in my hands for collection and will pass into the hands of my deputies on Monday the 15th day of June 1874, until then taxes may be settled at the Treasurer's office with the simple penalty of ten per centum and interest added. Afterward there will be other costs and charges added, whether payment by made to the collector in person, or to the Treasurer. There will be further charges in case of collections by sale of goods and chattels, and the legal fees for posting notices. Bear in mind that no tax can be settled without the lawful fees after reaching the deputies hands, and no Treasurer or Deputy, dare accept the fees without the tax. In compliance with the late law of the State of Indiana the deputy collectors will be compelled to enforce payment at once upon receipt of the lists. The new law further provides that the deputies as well as the Treasurer, have the power at all times to levy on the personal property of delinquents, wherever such may be found, to satisfy both land and chattel tax. The law provides that when property fails to sell where first offered, it may be removed to some other township and again exposed to sale. Deputies will be responsible under bond and oath for the return of every dollar collectable by law. The new law compels Treasurers to collect the tax of delinquents where there is personal property that he can levy on to make such tax if he fail to make such tax when it can be done in this manner, he will have to pay the whole amount himself at his settlement with the Auditor of his county. Now let me kindly urge each delinquent tax payer to avail himself of this timely notice and call and settle his tax account before the 15th day of June 1874 as the Treasurers are bound under the new law to show no favors to any one.

Very respetfully your obedient servant,
NICHOLAS ENSLEY, Treasurer.

—OF—

DeKALB COUNTY

NUMBER TWELVE

Before proceeding with the Townships in succession we will give a brief history of the organization of the County, and of the location and Settlement of the County Seat—the goodly town of Auburn. In this part of our duty, as chronicler, we are happy to be able to give the reader the narrative of Mr. Wesley Park, who laid out the town.

WESLEY PARK'S NARRATIVE.

"In the fall of 1135, George Stone, Hiram Johnston and myself, left Licking county, Ohio, in a two horse buggy, to seek a home in what was then called the west. We went by the way of Columbus Sandusky, Maumee, Defiance, Fish creek and Lima, to South Bend. We then returned to Lima, where Johnson and Stone settled, and started a tannery. I returned to Fish creek, and entered land adjoining John Holton's. I then returned to Ohio, and staid till February, 1836.—Started to Indiana, then, with a drove of cattle, and a load of dried fruits. Got to Lima, sold out, and started in company with John B. Howe, Esq., to the center of the New County, afterwards called DeKalb, to locate a site for a County Seat. We got to Pigeon river, and the canoe upsetting, I swam over the stream. Howe came over in the canoe, swimming his horse along side. Staid all night at Glover's. Started in the morning on our journey, and that night reached section 13, Town, 34, Range 13, (Union Township,) and lay out in the woods. The snow was four inches deep. We kindled a fire, and I peeled bark to lie down on, but Howe being tired or lazy or both, lay down on the snow. In the morning he had melted his whole length in the snow and was wet—but I was dry. I lay all night with my rifle by my side, to be prepared for the wolves that howled around continually. After hunting a day for the best tite, decided on the place of land where Auburn now is. Entered the land and laid out the town. I then put up a shanty ten by twelve feet, and cut a road through to pleasant lake, brought through a cart load of goods, with a yoke of oxen and a milk cow. Afterwards, Joseph Miller and I started from Wm. Millers's (where Mr. Ditmer now lives,)—I with my cart and oxen, and he with me to help cut the road. (The road spoken of in a former chapter as being cut through from Blair's mill, afterwards Shryock's, being nothing but a trace with the logs still in and too narrow for a cart, as we shall notice hereafter). "My object was to get through by the way of Blair's mill, to Fort Wayne for a load of provisions. It was afternoon before we started, and night overtook us near the little creek that crosses the Fort Wayne road near Mr. John Grube's. We had no provisions along, as we expected to get through to Blair's. The cow, however, that I brought through from Pleasant Lake, being used to following the team, was fortunately with us, and I milked her and told Miller, that milk was good enough for me. Miller, didn't like to drink the new milk, but there was no alternative, so he took a good draught. It did not lie well on his stomach, and he soon threw it up. The next morning, after lying out through the night, we cut through to the mill, and I went on to Fort Wayne, and miller returned to get his breakfast, no doubt with a good appetite. Getting back with my provisions, I set up tavern in my shanty. I did my own cooking, and was crowded with travelers and landhunters, who came to have me show them land to enter. One night I kept fifteen men, who very nearly filled my hotel. Some lay on a shelf, and the rest on the ground under it; so there was plenty of bed-room. After eating up the first load of provisions, I went to Fort Wayne for another. On my return little cedar was so high, that I had to swim my oxen, and carry the load and cart by pieces over the creek on a log; as I had adopted as my motto "go ahead." Got back again to the hotel. Kept travelers, showed land, and erected a cabin 18 by 20 feet, 1½ stories high, with a roof of rafters and clapboards. It stood on the lot where Michael Kline now lives close to the old watar saw mill. I then returned to Ohio, and brought out my wife Sophia, and my son Amos then a child. Lancelot Ingman and family, also came with me. We all arrived at Auburn on the 6th day of August, 1836. We laid down a few puncheons, and went to housekeeping. A few days work completed our cabin. In the winter of 1836, the act passed the Legislature to organize DeKalb county. Littlefield, of La-Grange; Gilmore, of Steuben, and Robert Work, of Allen, were appointed Commissioners to locate the County seat.

C. BAKER & BRO.

May 20 1874.

We have a gentleman in town who is great on proverbs. He ever hears or sees anything but he connects it with a proverb. His attention was called to the fact that we had a white easter. "How is it on old white easter,' said his friend.—"Well" says the man of many proverbs, "a white easter"—here he hesitated a little, but rising to the occasion said, "a white Easter is wise, and consequently knows its own father."

An exchange says, 'When a hen lays an egg she cackles. It is hen nature.' When a man gets in a new stock of goods it is human for him to crow over it. When the hen cackles, people know she has laid in some fresh stock and feels rather proud of it. When the merchant opens his new styles, and blows his trumpet in the news papers, people know that he has something on hand that is worth advertising. Blow your trumpet once in a while. It won't hurt you or the trumpet either.

We noticed the afflicted look of some of our citizens. Felt invariably a deep sympathy, and ask what was the matter?—Wife sick—a little boy or a girl, was the reply. Feel relieved, now, whenever we see a man looking sad. The world is moving along as usual—some going out and some coming in. Let 'em go, let 'em come, let the world move on. We all turn those two mysterious corners, coming in and going out. "Hail Columbia, Happy Land."

Mr. Picker is putting up a large brick building at Spencerville.

We hope that our town authorities will be so exorbitant in their demands for licenses from the many shows upon their travels this season, as to keep them away from our town. We would advocate the lowest possible tax on these occasions, out of consideration for our people in town and country. We hope our new Marshal will be liberal with all the great shows for the present season, and induce as many to come here as possible. Don't get the license fees to "Hi."

"And so they go," one of the Portland school committee is reported to have said: "Our great men are fast departing—first Greeley, then Chase, and now Sumner—and I don't feel very well myself." That isn't the way with the Vordermark's. They feel first rate themselves, and are selling an awful sight of boots and shoes. Indeed their sales are very large. The reason is, their stock is full and complete in every particular, all of the latest and best styles, and are being sold cheaper than any house in town. Those who have never tried them had better do so at once. Remember the place, Odd Fellows Block.

Since woman is doing so much good in their crusade against whisky we propose that some one of them make her name memorable by starting a crusade against cigar smoking and the use of tobacco, for it is a great evil. How many people are there that burn up more money in the use of cigars than their house rent?—Young man just figure up one month's use and see which is the largest, and then ask yourself the Question: Am I any better off or happier for using them?

While out strolling the other evening we were pleased, as well as surprised, at the improvement our town is making. A careful scrutiny shows that there are now in the course of erection about 40 houses—the greater number being residences. We were particularly gratified with the progress in the north end of town, and would be glad to say as much for the other parts. We noticed several old houses that are undergoing a thorough renovating. Repairing and painting houses will be "too numerous to mention," and we are safe in saying that one hundred new houses will be built here during the season.

FOURTH OF JULY.—Although there is sometime intervening between now and the anniversary of our nation's independence, steps have already been taken by several of our citizens. If in order, we would urge our business men of the town to look up this matter, and ascertain as soon as possible whether or not we celebrate this day. On such occasions our merchants experience a "fat take," and it affords our people a day and evening for innocent amusement and recreation.—It concentrates an interest in the place.—It fills our hotels and adds largely to every department of trade, by drawing people from a distance. Look it up.

A young man from the country called at the Postoffice and inquired if they had sun-glasses, and was showed a small looking glass, about the size of a silver half dollar. 'That's he," said the lad, 'what's the worth o' that? 'Ten cents,' said the clerk; 'shall I rap it up?' 'Yes, by-cane, I've wanted o' them this year or more.'—Out came his waltet, from the bind pocket of his breeches, and the last ten cents was given away in anticipation of kindling a fire with his new sun glass. He turned his 'brogans' toward the door and picked up one after the other as fast as could be expected, considering the size of them, until he reached the rear end of the Court House. Gathering together a bunch of paper, shavings and sticks he held his 'sun-glass' over it until the sun had gone down. He look at it closely, and when he saw his own 'cranium' inside he returned it and demanded his money back. He finally concluded that he would wait until he came to town again and then settle it. That clerk had better return the ten cents and save himself from getting a huge nose. The young man says he dont care for the money, but is bound not to be imposed upon.

Mollila Maud, daughter of Mr. & Mrs. R. Weaver aged 8 months, died Friday morning, May 15th 1874.

"The grass withereth, the flower fadeth"
'Neath the curtain of new tender green
'Mid the buds and the blossoms of May,
When the birds sang their vesper strains,
They laid their sweet treasure away.
Oh, the angel of mercy had come
And has taken their blossom away
Now to keep it all safely at home.
There, to bloom one eternal, bright day.

COURT—The case of the State of Indiana vs Ernest Mansdorfer indicted for an assault and battery with intent to kill, W. W. Humes, was tried last Tuesday. The jury after being out over night returned their verdict of guilty and assessed a penalty of imprisonment in the State's prison for two years. Motions for a new trial and in arrest of judgment were interposed and overruled, whereupon Judge Best pronounced the sentence on the virdict.

The case of the State of Indiana against Frank Streby, who was jointly indicted with Mansdorfer was decided not guilty.

The case of Cobler against Cobler, was tried Monday and Tuesday of this week, each party claimed a judgment against the other for over $100. The jury were out about twenty minutes and returned a virdict for the plaintiff for $108. Messrs Penfield & Moody were for the Plaintiff, and Messrs Rose & Hartman for defendant.

Tea as a Crusade Object.

The Chicago Tribune intimates that since the frantic feature of the woman's crusade against the saloons has subsided, it would be a very good idea for the ladies to turn their attention to the excessive and injurious tea drinking of American women, and quotes Mrs. Zina Fay Pierce as follows:

"Tea drinking is one reason, I believe, of the craving of American men for distilled liquors. Their mothers by the entire neglect of fomented drinks of any kind which soothe and invigorate the system—the vital force—that they have given debilitated constitutions to their sons to begin with. If tea and coffee are drank twice daily, I do not hesitate to say that, to balance their effects, malt liquor or pure wine ought to be drank once."

This is very severe on our American tea soakers and quite knocks in the head the utility and truthfulness of the oft quoted line. "The cup that cheers, and not inebriates."

The shipments made in excess of the receipts from Government were from private contributions. We have been far from supplying the demands on us. We estimate, from the best information we can gather, that the number of sufferers in Louisiana alone is 56,500. In Louisiana the calls are increasing as the distress becomes greater from the exhaustion of supplies in the hands of the people at the time of the overflow."

THE bill agreed upon by the House Committee on Postoffices, for the prepayment of postage matter, accords with the recommendations of the Postmaster-General, and provides that publishers may prepay the postage on their publications by the pound, probably at the rate of two cents a pound. If this law goes into effect, it will imply be necessary to weigh each mail edition of newspapers and periodicals in bulk, and will compel publishers to charge their subscribers in advance for the postage on the matter which the latter receive. SOUTHERN METHODISTS.

The General Conference at Louisville—Reception of the Delegation from the Northern Churches.

LOUISVILLE, May 11.—The great sensation in the proceedings of the General Conference on Friday was the reception of three Commissioners from the M. E. Church North: the Rev. A. C. Hunt, the Rev. C. H. Fowler, and Gen. Clinton B. Fisk. After the interchange of introductions and greetings between the Bishops and the visitors, they were presented to the Conference by Bishop McIntyre, and Dr. Hunt addressed the Conference in a long speech.

In the course of his remarks he said:

"We are here as representatives of the Methodist Episcopal Church to present its fraternal greeting. It is now more than thirty years since your organization had its birth. The grave has been open during this time, and has swallowed up many of the most illustrious patriarchs of the organization. Few of them, it is true, still survive, and let us hope the others are with us. To us and to those whom we represent, and to those whom you represent, this separation is known as more a matter of history.

"I am aware that, during the last quarter of a century, many things have developed in which our opinions differ. But we should remember there are many more in which we agree. We offer to-day our fraternal greeting; we desire nothing but mutual recognition; we are, indeed, almost a unity, and each recognizes in the other a living unit with Lord Jesus Christ.

"They do really seem to be the same, being children of a common Father. It appears fitting for us to move on together, so, if there was no other bond of union, we should clasp hands with each other in this fellowship in Christ. We glory together in our peculiar doctrines of Methodism, glory in the same founder, and we should certainly come together occasionally to exchange such fraternal feeling."

In concluding, Dr. Hunt read a very old letter from Bishop Asbury, full, as he expressed it, "of jottings of Methodism." Dr. Hunt added; "With those bonds of common history we come before you; with bonds of enthusiasm characteristic of Methodism, we also come. Let lexicographers rage if they will at enthusiasm; let it be denounced in unmitigated terms as it has been; enthusiasm, as one of the strongest, steadiest forces, incites to noble deeds. We take it, and go forth with it, and achieve glory for the cause we have espoused."

Dr. Fowler, in his remarks, referred to the many points of union between the two churches; referred to Vanderbilt's endowment of the Vanderbilt University as a symbol of the love felt by the North toward the South, and concluded by saying;

"There is no longer cause for estrangement when we know one another. We will love one another this day. In the name of the company I represent, I give you my hand as you have my heart, leaving the question to be settled in the future."

Gen. Fisk made an eloquent address, frequently interrupted by applause. At the conclusion of Gen. Fisk's remarks, the Rev. A. W. Wilson, of Washington City, in view of the importance of the subject, and in order to its proper presentation for the consideration of the conference, moved that a committee of nine be appointed by the Chair to prepare and present to the General Conference, for its consideration, a suitable response to the greeting by these fraternal messengers. The motion was adopted, and the Chair said he would announce the committee hereafter.

The Arkansas Rebellion.

LITTLE ROCK, May 12.—There was another slight skirmish to-day between the Brooks and Baxter forces. For a time the firing was exceedingly brisk, and the greatest excitement prevailed in the city. Fortunately, Uncle Sam's blue-coats interposed between the combatants and prevented the serious shedding of blood. The Brooksites are reported to have lost eight killed and wounded. The Baxterite casualties were three men wounded and one horse killed. The negotiations for the settlement of the imbroglio have all fallen through.

LITTLE ROCK, May 13.—Nothing of importance in a military way occurred during the night or to-day. Gen. King White started out last night with two or three cavalry companies, and one of infantry, and going four miles south on the Cairo and Fulton railroad, met the train bringing in the two three-inch Parrott guns sent from Texas to Gov. Baxter, and, taking them off, brought them to the city, to prevent their capture by the Brooks party.

Several Brooks companies were sent during the day and to-night to strengthen their lines in the southwestern part of the city against another attack, but none came; and, beyond the usual picket-firing and running in of scouts by both sides, nothing occurred until 2 p. m. Then, two Baxter men and a Brooksite got into an altercation on the street in front of the Metropolitan Hotel, which resulted in the drawing of revolvers, each party retreating and firing. Friends on both sides joined in the shooting, the result being that a non-combatant named Powers and a negro were wounded. As usual, the national troops prevented a general conflict. Reinforcements for both parties continue to come in.

The Legislature met in response to Baxter's call, and, a quorum of both houses being present, an organization was perfected and Baxter notified that the Legislature was ready for business.

Newspaper Supplements.

[From the Lansing (Mich.) Republican.]

We took an appeal from the decision of the First Assistant Postmaster-General against the circulation of newspaper supplements not printed in their own offices. The matter being urged on the Postmaster-General's attention, he referred it to Hon. T. A. Spence, the functionary who defines laws touching our postal service, and he has given the opinion printed below. It fully recognizes the right of newspapers to issue supplements printed anywhere, but intended to "supply an omission in that particular issue of the paper to which it professes to be a supplement."

OFFICE OF ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL OF POSTOFFICE DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, D. C., April 24, 1874.

SIR: At your request, I state to you my understanding of the proper meaning and intendment of the word "supplement," in the following sentence of the 128th section of the regulations of the Postoffice Department:

"Publishers of newspapers may, without subjecting them to extra postage, fold with their regular issues a supplement."

The next succeeding sentence of the section was clearly intended to explain and define the word as then used; but so defined, its exact meaning is not free from doubt. In my opinion the word is used according to its ordinary signification and meaning—a matter supplied for completeness, to that to which it is added or supplemented, which the original should have contained, but was omitted from want of space, time or greater convenience.

As used in this sentence in relation to newspapers, it is printed matter proper to be inserted in the newspaper to which it is supplied; but has not been, from want of space, or want of time, or because it is more convenient regarding space and time, or either, that it should be printed on a separate sheet. It is not indispensable or necessary that the sheet should be printed at the office of the newspaper to which it is intended to be a supplement; but if printed there or elsewhere, to be considered and treated as a supplement, it must be printed with the intention and purpose only of supplying an omission in that particular issue of the newspaper to which it professes to be a supplement, and not for any other distinct and separate use.

A supplement should have direct relation to the paper supplemented, and without which the paper supplemented would be incomplete.

Very respectfully,
(Signed) T. A. SPENCE,
Assistant Att'y Gen. P. O. Dep't.
Hon. J. A. J. CRESWELL, Postmaster-Gen'l.

NEW YORK, with a million inhabitants, uses about as much water every day as London does with 3,620,000 people; in other words, the average New Yorker consumes three times as much as the average Londoner. The daily supply in London is 110,874,000 gallons. In New York it is 104,000,000 gallons.

BERNVILLE, Penn., boasts of four landlords weighing a total of 994 pounds; the heaviest 327 pounds.

Humanity in War.

It is related of Henry IV., the first French king of the house of Bourbon, that while besieging Paris, at that time held against him by the Catholic League, he was urgently advised to take the city by assault before the troops daily expected from the King of Spain could arrive to succor the leaguers. He knew that by a determined assault he could carry the works before him, but he protested against it on the principle of humanity.

"I will not," said he, "expose the capital of my country to the miseries and horrors which must follow such an event. I will show to my people that I am their father; and I will follow the example of the true mother who presented herself before Solomon. I will not gain the prize through the slaughter of innocent persons."

In time Henry reduced the city with the loss of but few lives. In a subsequent conversation upon the subject of the number slain, he exclaimed:

"If it were in my power, I would give anything but my kingly honor to redeem those citizens, and to have the satisfaction of informing posterity that I had subdued Paris without spilling a drop of blood."

We have another instance of humanity in the war of 1796 between France and Austria. It is related of the Archduke Charles that, when hastening from Bohemia to take commrnd of the Austrian army, he met, near the scene of a late action, a large number of wounded soldiers, both French and Austrian, who, in the haste of retreat and pursuit, had been abandoned where they had fallen. The only horses at hand which could possibly be used in removing these helpless sufferers were attached to the artillery.

"Let the cannon be left behind," said the humane prince, "and let these poor fellows be saved." And when one of his generals remonstrated, he added:

"No, no; let it be as I have ordered. The life of one brave man is better worth preserving than fifty pieces of ordnance."

When the French general, Moreau, into whose hands the cannon thus abandoned had fallen, learned the motive which had prompted the Archduke to make the sacrifice, he ordered the whole to be restored, observing that he should be unworthy of being the opponent of his imperial highness if he took advantage of so noble an act of humanity.

Nitro-Glycerine.

Nitro-glycerine, the most powerful explosive known, being ten times as powerful as gunpowder, is made of glycerine and nitric and sulphuric acid. It was discovered in 1847, and first used in 1864. Glycerine is an oily substance derived from tallow or suet, or what are known as animal fats. When such or common soap-grease is boiled with soda lye or with any other lye by which hard soap is made, the glycerine becomes separated from the fat and is left, a large part at least, in the water upon which the cake of soda floats. In the manufacture of glycerine, the fat is first made into soap, or, as it is called, saponified, and by a very interesting process it is then separated in the shape of an oily but not greasy substance. The glycerine is poured into a mixture of one measure of nitric acid and two measures of sulphuric acid very slowly and with the greatest care. The mixture is then poured into water, in which it sinks to the bottom without mixing with it in the least. It is then complete, and such a highly dangerous article that the greatest care is used to avoid accidents both in making and using it. It will explode by friction or simple rubbing upon a rough surface, or by a blow as with a hammer, or simply falling upon the ground, especially when frozen or becomes solid through exposure and cold. For these reasons it is very rarely used, unless first mixed with sawdust or a fine earth which is called infusorial earth, because it consists of very minute animals once living in water, known as infusoriae by scientific people. When thus mixed, it is in the shape of a dry, solid substance or coarse powder, which, if put in a fire will not explode or "go off" like gunpowder, but simply burn like so much rosin. But when it is used in a hole bored in a rock, it is so much more powerful than gunpowder that it has enabled people to make tunnels like the Hoosac or the Mount Cenis tunnel in a quarter of the time usual with gunpowder. It is, therefore, the most powerful of modern inventions.—Scientific American.

Imaginative Medicine.

Charms, amulets, talismans, and phylacteries all belong to the list of articles which produce imaginative cures; seeing that the persons who trust to them believe in some good obtainable from them, in purse or in person, in health or in welfare; and if good does come, more assuredly the imagination is the channel through which it approaches. Two or three years ago, at a town in Worcestershire, after the inquest on the body of a man drowned in the Severn, a woman applied to the chief constable for permission to draw the hand of her son, a boy eight or nine years of age, nine times across the dead man's throat, in order to bring about the removal of a wen from the boy's neck. In another instance, in the same county, this was actually done, with fatal results; for the man had died of typhoid fever, which was in this way communicated to several living persons. A ring made of the hinge of a coffin, and a rusty old sword hung by the bedside, are (in some districts) charms against the cramp; headache is removed by the halter that has hung a criminal, and also by a snuff made from moss that has grown on a human skull in a graveyard. A dead man's hand, and especially the hand of a man who had been cut down while hanging, dispels tumors. Warts may be removed by rubbing them with a bit of stolen beef; the chips of a gallows, worn in a little bag round the neck, will cure the ague; a stone with a hole in it, suspended at the bed's head, will prevent nightmare. Many verses are known, which if repeated aloud, are credited with curing cramp, burns, and other bodily troubles. When you have the whooping-cough, apply for a remedy to the first person you meet with riding on a piebald horse—a ceremony that Dr. Lettsom, the physician, was fated more than once to become acquainted with.—All the Year Round.

Ten ministers belonging to the Queen's household (such as Lord Chamberlain, Lord Steward, Master of the Horse, etc.) receive £15,638 per annum, paid out of the Queen's civil list.

The Negro Character.

The whole of my experience in Central Africa says that the negroes not yet spoiled by contact with the slave trade are distinguished for friendliness and good, sound sense. Some can be guilty of great wickedness, and seem to think little about it; others perform actions as unmistakably good with no great self-complacency; and if one catalogued all the good deeds or all the bad ones he came across, he might think the men extremely good or excessively bad, instead of calling them, like ourselves, curious compounds of good and evil. In one point they are remarkable—they are honest. Even among the cannibal Manyuema, a slave-trader at Bambarre and I had to send our goats and fowls up to the Manyuema village to prevent their being stolen by my friends' own slaves. Another wide-spread trait of character is a trusting disposition. The Central African tribes are the antipodes to some of the North American Indians, and very unlike many of their own countrymen who have come into contact with Mohammedans and Portuguese and Dutch Christians. They at once perceive the superiority of the strangers in power of mischief, and readily listen to and ponder over friendly advice. After the cruel massacre of Nyangue—which I unfortunately witnessed—fourteen chiefs, whose villages had been destroyed, and many of them killed, fled to my house and begged me to make peace for them with the Arabs, and then come over to their side of the River Lualaba, divide their country anew, and point out where each should build a new village and cultivate other plantations. The peace was easily made, for the Arabs had no excuse for their senseless murders, and each blamed the others for the guilt.—Dr. Livingstone's Letter to James Gordon Bennett, Jr.

ONE'S PHOTOGRAPH.—It is asserted that unless a man copyright his photograph he has no exclusive claim to it. In other words, a man publishes his face by photographing it, and any one has a right to use and sell such photographs so long as they are not copyrighted. This view of the matter has recently been sustained by the English courts, and it is now the recognized law in England that the ownership of photographs is vested in the photographer, and not in his sitters. The idea that a man can scatter his photographs broadcast, and still claim the right to say whether this or that illustrated paper shall use them, is deemed an absurdity which no court would venture to uphold.

DR. KENEALY'S PAPER.—"The Englishman. Edited by Dr. Kenealy, Q. C. No. 1, volume 1; price, 2d. 'A Jesuit may speak that which is true, but it ought to be received as from Satan, cautiously, lest mischief be hid under it.'" This is the title and the motto of publication which has made its appearance in London. The journal addresses itself only to those who believe that he who was the claimant and who is now No. 803 in Millbank prison is Sir Roger Tichborne. Dr. Kenealy says that his journal will have 150,000 subscribers. At 2d each this will bring in a weekly revenue of £1,250, and this will amply compensate him for his ruin as a barrister.

ENGLAND'S NAVY.—From the latest official returns it appears there are now twenty-seven vessels of war being built for the British navy. The largest of these are the Inflexible, of 11,165 tons, and the Fury, of 10,950 tons. Both are turret ships of 8,000 horse-power, and are to be armed with four guns of the largest size. Next to these are the Superb, of 9,400 tons, 8,000 horse-power and twelve guns, and the Temeraire, of 8,415 tons, 7,000 horse-power and eight guns. The others range from gunboats, of which there are seven, to several of about 4,000 tons. Many of these vessels are nearly ready for launching.

A LAD in Detroit, kept in the house by a lame leg, has trained a rat to come forth at his whistle, stand on its hind feet, roll over, leap through a hoop and execute other feats. This, however, is nothing to the training of the family cat. Though she is the inexorable foe of all the other rats, she will stretch herself out and permit the educated rat to jump over her. Twice a week the boy has an exhibition. Admission, five cents.

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

Farm Notes.

The farm is the safest and surest;
 The orchards are loaded to-day;
You are free as the air of the mountain
 And monarch of all you survey.
But stay on the farm awhile longer,
 Though profits come in rather slow,
Remember you've nothing to risk, boys,
 Don't be in a hurry to go.

WHEAT seeds can bear for several hours a temperature as high as the boiling point of water without losing the power of germination.

THERE is a great deficiency in farmers' gardens of the medical and useful herbs. Wormwood, tansy, sage, thyme, summer savory, etc., are frequently needed, and are sometimes troublesome to obtain.

SURE CURE FOR CATTLE LICE.—Take one heaping teaspoonful of copperas; mix with bran or any other kind of meal. If you haven't any meal, mix with salt. Two doses will drive them entirely away. It will not only kill the lice, but it will keep off diseases and give the cattle an appetite. I have tried it twenty-five years, and never knew it to fail.—Exchange.

THE profits of farming should consist, in a large measure, in the improvement of the farm itself and its belongings, and there can be no better investment than this. That is very poor farming, if worthy to be called farming, which, though it may originally show a cash balance, leaves the homestead in a worse instead of a better condition than it found it.

PLOWING UNDER CROPS.—A correspondent of the Farmers' Advocate gives these directions: Fasten one end of chain on furrow end of double-tree, and let chain lie down in the furrow; fasten the other end round the plow-beam, and give length of chain according to height of grass plowed under. Now, I think you will understand my plan of doing it. I plowed under Ohio corn this summer, about five feet high, and put it all out of sight, which would be impossible to do with a ball and chain. A cutter shear will work the best to plow under very long grass.

SALT FOR HOGS.—The Agriculturist says: The unrestrained appetite of swine will often lead them to consume things that are highly injurious to them. Cases of poisoning by partaking of excessive quantities of salt often occur among hogs at this season, when beef and pork barrels are emptied of the old brine and refuse salt. A case in which several hogs were thus lost in England was recently noted. Hogs require a certain amount of salt as do other animals, but it should be given to them with caution, and either evenly mixed in their feed or scattered very thinly about their troughs, so that one more greedy than another cannot take more than its proper share.

FACTS IN FATTENING CATTLE.—Boussingault estimates that an ox weighing 748 pounds, fed upon forty pounds per diem, will increase in weight about two pounds daily. According to Mr. Low, an ox weighing 770 pounds and consuming 223 pounds of turnips per week, if he thrives, will gain in the same time nearly a stone, fourteen pounds, in weight. Allowing 100 pounds of hay, worth 676 pounds of turnips, the increase is still about two pounds a day.

Mr. Dubois says the quantity of green fodder consumed by an ox during the eight months when he is fattening, is equivalent to 6,600 pounds of dry hay. The average ration of green forage per diem, he calculates, therefore, as equivalent to about 27 pounds of hay.

But this average is evidently too small, particularly for cold weather, which was proven in the valley of Auge in Normandy.

Mr. Stephenson estimates that 57 per per cent. of the whole animal will be butchers' meat; 8 per cent. tallow; 6 per cent. hide and 29 per cent. entrails. This of course depends upon the condition of the beef—a fat one will yield a greater per cent. than a lean. Others give the per cent. of meat 53 to 62 per cent.

Household Helps.

CORN DROP-CAKES.—Mix corn-meal with boiling new milk until you have a thick batter; put in the patent pans at once, and bake for twenty or thirty minutes.

TEST a cake to see if it is done, by running a clean straw into the thickest part. If it comes out dry and clean, the cake is done.

TO MEND AND CLEAN KID GLOVES.—Turn them on the wrong side and sew them over and over in the ordinary way. They will last longer and look better, if mended on the wrong side. Turn them back again, and go over them with a clean towel dipped in skim-milk, wearing them during the process and until they are quite dry.

AMERICAN RAISED WAFFLES.—One pint of sweet milk, one heaping teacupful of butter, three eggs, a teaspoonful of thick brewer's yeast, one quart of flour, and another teacupful of sweet milk, in which is dissolved a quarter of a teaspoonful of soda. Let it rise until light, then bake as other waffles. Serve with butter and sugar.

GRAHAM BREAD.—Four quarts of unbolted wheat; a teacupful of yeast; half a cup of molasses; one tablespoonful of salt; mix with warm water enough to make a stiff dough; let it rise six or eight hours, wet your hands in cold water to put it into the pans; let it rise an hour, or until it has risen an inch, and bake two hours. It should be very well baked.

WHY DOES THE IRON STICK?—Sometimes the iron will stick in a manner perfectly unaccountable; if it is rubbed on a board on which fine salt has been sprinkled and then pressed over a brown paper with wax in its folds, the sticking propensities will be checked. A bowl of clear water and a clean old linen cloth are useful to remove any specks the linen may acquire before or after being ironed.

TO BOIL EGGS.—When you select eggs for boiling, test their freshness by putting them in a pan of cold water. Those that sink are the best. Always let the water boil before putting your eggs in. Three minutes will boil them soft; four minutes the whites will be completely done, and in six minutes they will be sufficiently hard for garnishing salads and dishes requiring them.

BREAD PUDDING.—Beat the yolks of five eggs; add a pint of sweet milk and five tablespoonfuls of stale bread. Bake it a light brown, and then put on a layer of preserves; beat the whites of the eggs very stiff; and then beat in five tablespoonfuls of fine sugar; pour it over the top, return it to the oven, and bake a pretty light brown. If you like, add extract of lemon or vanilla to the white of egg before putting it on.

TOMATO WINE.—Take any quantity of fully ripe tomatoes, wash and express from them the juice, strain and to every gallon add four pounds (avoirdupois) crushed sugar; let stand until it is done fermenting, keeping the cask filled with fresh juice and sugar as above. When done fermenting, draw off without agitation, and bottle. Will be prime in six to twelve months. The yellow tomato makes a white wine with yellow tinge; the red a darker colored wine, of course.

Two Women—How One Married the Other.

Thirty years ago there was born to Mr. and Mrs. John Nostrand, then living at Esperance, Schoharie, a fair-faced child. Acting on the suggestion of the old family physician, the child was dressed in girl's clothes, although whether this was appropriate or not was a matter of some doubt to the perplexed parents. The little one was named Ada. When Ada was about two years old her parents moved to this county, settling then, or soon afterward, close by the old Pine tavern, on the Oswego stage road, and about one mile from Blossvale. As the years passed Ada grew strong and rather tall; she wore her hair long, but as she reached maturity an unmistakable beard began to show itself on her face and her voice became quite masculine. She also manifested a decided and unusual love for other girls, while she seemed to care but little for the company or admiration of the sterner sex. Five years ago she went to Cleveland, Ohio, and secured a position as a domestic at a boarding-house, and before she left there her masculine appearance was so noticeable that she was arrested, charged with being a man dressed in woman's clothes; nor was she able to prove this untrue, but fortunately the proprietor of the boarding-house was also a physician, and had prescribed for her shortly before that. Hearing of the case, he secured her release. Ada also worked for Simon Isabell, of Westmoreland, doing much out-door work. Indeed her father, who does not look at all ailing, physically, says she can chop about as much as he can, and that she is "man enough to handle lots of the boys who are talking so much." About two years ago Ada bought of one of the Messrs. Searles the old William Sykes farm, close to the Pine tavern. The house had been burned and Ada, who has worked there since, went to live at the house of Amos June, who lived near. June is not altogether as placid as the sweet summer time, and he does not live at all times harmoniously with his family. Some time since his son died, and soon June married his son's widow. The younger June left a daughter, Lottie, who is well spoken of by those who know her. By this weeding Lottie found herself the stepdaughter of her grandfather, the granddaughter of her mother, and generally unable to establish the exact degree of consanguinity of her relatives with any degree of satisfaction. Other reasons combined to make her home not altogether pleasant. When Ada went to live at the June house she soon formed quite an attachment for Lottie, then about fifteen years of age, and as this attachment ripened, she became more and more impatient at the disguise of her dress. Indeed, she had frequently before upbraided her parents for dressing her in girl's clothes, insisting that she had no business to wear them. The love between Ada and Lottie reached its culmination on Thursday, April 2. On the evening of that day a well-dressed young man, who gave his name as Edward Nostrand, with a blushing and pretty maiden, who was Lottie June, called at the residence of Rev. J. W. Simpson, of Taberg, where they were made one flesh. This step had been decided upon at least a year before, we are told. Edward Nostrand, who is now raising quite a beard, is 30 years of age. The charming Mrs. Nostrand is 17. They live at what is known as Weaver's, about two miles from Blossvale, and seem to be happy. This is all we know about it.—Rome (N. Y.) Sentinel.

Relation of Water to Health.

Dr. Letherby, an eminent English physician and chemist, after devoting many years to investigation of the properties of the water introduced into English cities, and to a study of the sanitary documents on the subject, is reported to have come to the conclusion that moderately hard water is safer and healthier than soft water. The former, he asserts, is not only clearer, colder, more free from air, and consequently more agreeable than soft water, but is less likely to absorb organic substances, to sustain the life of zymotic organisms, or to exert solvent properties upon salts of iron or upon leaden conducting pipes; the lime salts also exert a beneficial influence upon the animal economy, and, even protect the system from dangerous outward influences. The argument is, that the human body requires for its nourishment and support a supply of certain mineral salts, among which carbonate and phosphate of lime play an important part in building up the compactness of the bones and in other functions, and hard water furnishes these salts.

THE GRANGERS.

Economic Features of the Movement—The Results Which Have Been Secured by Co-operation—What the Manufacturers are Doing—Their Battle with the Granges.

[From the Chicago Tribune.]

The Executive Committee of the Wisconsin State Grange recently held a meeting, at which it was ascertained that the whole number of subordinate granges in the State is now 340, all but 100 of which have been organized since the 1st of March, 1873. These have an average membership of 46 each, making 19,780 Grangers in the State. Under these, 41 County Councils have been organized to attend to the purchasing of supplies for the different granges, and to manage the co-operative stores, factories, and mills already begun. A law has also been passed enabling them to incorporate local fire-insurance companies, of which 29 are already doing business. They usually include about four civil townships within their assigned territory, give the offices of President and Secretary to some of the local town officers, and charge from 1 to 2 mills on the dollar, besides a policy and survey fee of $1.50, for carrying risks, and as yet there has not been a failure to meet a liability. Several of them are carrying from $400,000 to $800,000 each in risks, and, while the insurance is cheap, the satisfaction given is universal, so far as reported to the State Executive Committee.

The farmers' implements are bought for cash at the co-operative factory or through the county or State purchasing agent; the dairy products go to his own cheese or butter factory; the necessaries of life cost him from 10 to 15 per cent. less than formerly; a grange elevator receives his wheat or corn, which is shipped through his own agent, and sold in Chicago by his own commission merchant, who sells at once and remits the money, thus saving the profit of the ubiquitous wheat-buyer at the railroad station, and also the high rate of elevator tariff. Co-operation with a hundred of his neighbors has reduced his expenses to the lowest point, and has secured for him the highest price for his farm products.

"Reduced rates to Patrons" has now become a familiar display line in the advertising columns of the newspapers chiefly circulated among the farmers; while the "Grange store" is getting to be a feature common to nearly every country village. Only a few of these are managed directly by the Patrons on the co-operative plan, which is not regarded with entire favor as applied to the retailing of groceries, dry goods, etc. More frequently an arrangement is made with the country merchant, who sells to members of the grange at a discount from 5 to 15 per cent. from his regular prices. Still another, and probably the best mode of all, is that of purchasing direct from wholesale dealers. Once a month the Secretary of the Grange makes up an order for goods, which are shipped in bulk, in their original packages, and are then divided up and distributed among the various families. In this way a saving of from 10 to 20 per cent. is effected, according to the kind of goods. As the cash is paid in advance, the wholesale dealer ships the invoice direct to the Secretary of the Grange, who pays for it before taking it from the cars. Not only is the cost greatly reduced by this method, but the farmer is the gainer in getting a better quality than country merchants are in the habit of keeping. His sugar is all sugar, the tea is what it purports to be, and the ground coffee closely resembles the flavor of the original berry. A wholesale grocery house in Chicago now numbers as regular customers 1,200 different granges throughout the West.

Co-operative manufacturing is not likely to endure or increase proportionately with the other forms of the plan, for the reason that a large outlay of capital is required to begin with, and then skilled labor, honest and capable superintendence, and shrewd financial management are vitally necessary in order to make both ends meet. The advantages resulting from the general adoption of the cash system and the sharp competition for trade of this class, will do for the Grangers all and more than they can do for themselves in the matter of co-operative manufacturing. The question of direct dealing with manufacturers of agricultural implements, and the saving of the profit of the agent or middleman, is not easy of solution, as it contemplates and necessitates the breaking-up of established laws of trade, and, so far as can now be seen, does not furnish an acceptable substitute.

The manufacturer of the reaper or plow is asked to dispense with his local agent and sell direct to the farmer. He regards the agent as an absolute necessity—not for any love he bears him, but because he cannot do without him. He has selected as agent an energetic, reliable man of good financial standing and a thorough knowledge of the machine or implement. The agent buys his goods, out and out, of the manufacturer—buys on time, of course, but gives paper which the manufacturer can negotiate and use in his business. The risk of ordering too heavily is assumed by the agent, by whose estimate of the probable trade the manufacturer must be governed in laying his plans for the season's work. If a machine gets out of order, or goes wrong through the stupidity of the farmer, the agent must hurry to the spot and straighten things out, or else the machine will be returned as worthless, and a loss of no small consequence is the result. Now, is the grange prepared to fill the agent's place in these and other important particulars? Manufacturers can see no prospect of it, and they stick to the agent-system as a matter of self-preservation. For this reason the plow-makers passed their resolution not to deal with grange purchasing-agents, but agreeing that there should be a material reduction by their agents on all cash purchases by farmers.

The leading reaper men have been compelled to adopt the same rule, and it continues to apply to nearly all lines of agricultural apparatus. There are a few exceptions among the manufacturers, and instances are not lacking where direct sales are clandestinely made to the Patrons or their purchasing agents. Cash in hand is the temptation. It is the farmers' most potent adversary against monopolies and middlemen. With it he can buy his reaper or plow at figures which leave but a small margin of profit; without it, he must give his note, drawing interest for the full price of the machine. The agent takes the risk, and must realize a corresponding profit. A farmers' note may be perfectly good, but he pays it when he gets ready, and not before. Chicago manufactures to-day, through their agents, hold notes given ten years ago, for machines which have since been worn out and shelved. The interest has been met with more or less promptness and the principal will eventually be paid, but all this time it is so much money invested, which must be made to pay a return. With cash to pay for what he buys, the farmer need have no special dread of the middleman; that individual's profits will be very small compared with those he derives under the credit system. The laws of trade, and a safe method of doing business, seem to demand the services of the agent, whose functions the Patrons of Husbandry must perform, if they would push him from his place.

A considerable item in the co-operative economy lies in the direction of close dealing between producer and consumer, and the shipping of natural products in a concentrated form. Here a great reform is already under way. Within the past few months it is estimated that eighty elevators and grain-warehouses have been built by the Grangers in the Western States. To these the farmer hands his grain, leaving it there until he is ready to ship it. He pays only the usual cost of the storage, so apt to occur in these dishonest days. At any rate, if the thing fails to come out right, he knows whom to blame, and how to get redress. He is not now compelled to accept the bid of the grain-buyer, who insists upon his profit of from 10 to 15 per cent., but can now take his warehouse-receipts to the bank and obtain money for his pressing needs. If he desires to sell at once and directly in the chief market, he loads a car and ships his grain to the grange selling agent in Chicago, who returns him the freight-bill, the inspection certificate, the number of the warehouse receipt, and a draft for the amount realized by the sale, less a moderate commission. The Chicago agent sends his Grange customers, as well as all others, the daily market report, so that the farmer may know that his interests have been carefully and honestly looked after. The business is not so complicated but that every farmer can understand it easily.

Here is a gain of from 15 to 20 per cent. over the old mode of disposing of wheat and corn. The same benefit is realized with respect to all sorts of farm produce. A grange agent at the Union Stock-Yards receives and sells, or forwards, live-stock on the same plan, and the farmer saves the drovers' intermediate profit. If, in return for his grain or cattle, the farmer desires an equivalent in groceries, dry goods, clothing, hardware, etc., the Chicago agent will attend to their purchase and shipment without charge. He deals only with first-class houses, and the granger may be certain of getting his goods at the lowest market rates, as he has obtained the highest for his farm produce. In his dealings with the railroad companies the farmer may claim and receive facilities and accommodations equal to those enjoyed by the heavier shippers, but he must also submit to the conditions imposed upon them. When he has ordered a car to receive his grain or live-stock at the station on a certain day, he must be ready to receive and use the car on that day, or else pay for its disuse. It may take a little time to get the shipping system in perfect working order, but there need be no fear that it will not be eventually adjusted satisfactorily.

The shipping of farm products in a concentrated from is already receiving attention from the granges. Here co-operation is introduced with advantage in grist-mills and packing-houses. The experiment of making and shipping flour has been successfully tried by the grange mill near Northfield, Minn., and the killing and curing of hogs has received much attention during the past winter in the grange packing-houses. It has proved satisfactory, and the number of these establishments will be greatly increased this fall and winter. There is the packer's profit in this transaction, enhanced by cheaper labor and lower rents in the country, and the saving of time and freight, besides the buyer's profit, saved upon the packing. The distillation of corn into alcohol would be likely to enlist grange capital, were it not for the fact that the Patrons have quite generally committed themselves to the policy of total abstinence and prohibition. How far this will be allowed to hinder a profitable business enterprise, remains to be seen.

The bureau of agricultural has roughly estimated the saving to the Western farmer through the economic features of the grange to be from $6,000,000 to 7,000,000; and this is but the beginning of the immense advantages derived from the practice of superior economy, the abandonment of the vicious credit system, and the fostering of a sharp competition in trade. Grange experiments, like those in ordinary business methods, are not always successful. The shipment of cotton direct to London by a Mississippi grange resulted in a loss, as did also a corn shipment from Savoy, Ill., to New York. There, too, it is charged that purchasing agents are not invariably honest, and that they are sometimes prone to pocket a commission, of which no report is made to the grange. Manufacturers are "carrying the war into Africa" by underselling the agents at a loss to themselves, determined to break down the system, and Patrons, blind to their own interest, have been known to take advantage of this, though they do it at the peril of embarrassing their own purchasing-agents. Grange enterprises will fail through bad management or abuse of trust, just as common business ventures fail. But all this must not obscure the fact that the grange is an enormous power already, and seems destined to work out a great good in its proper and legitimate domain.

ILLINOIS FARMERS.

Meeting of the Advisory Committee of the State Farmers' Association—They Decide to Enter the Political Arena.

The Advisory Committee of the State Farmers' Association of Illinois met at Bloomington on Tuesday, May 5. Fifty counties were represented. W. C. Flagg presided, and S. M. Smith acted as Secretary. The forenoon was consumed in a general interchange of views between the members of the convention relative to taking political action during the coming campaign in Illinois, which developed an almost unanimous sentiment in favor of such a course.

At the afternoon session, after the report of the Committee on Credentials had been adopted, the President said the question before the house ought to be, "Shall the Farmers' Association take action in politics this year?"

Mr. Huber, of Sangamon, moved that the association take political action in this coming campaign.

The motion of Huber, that political action be taken this year, was put and carried unanimously amid tremendous enthusiasm.

Mr. Boone, of Jo Daviess county, read an extensive preamble declaring want of faith in all political parties and proposed a resolution to the effect that the Advisory Board of the State Farmers' Association call a State convention, to take political action, in the city of Bloomington, May 27.

Mr. Rector moved to amend by making June 10 the date of meeting.

Mr. S. M. Smith said that would give them a few days before the politicians get together.

Mr. Rector said he was not afraid of the politicians, either before or after their convention; he was willing to meet at any time that would suit the purpose of the association, and at any place where they might break the bonds of the monopolists from the limbs of the great State of Illinois. [Loud applause.]

Mr. Fitzpatrick, of McLean, moved an amendment to the amendment fixing the date of the convention for June 16.

Mr. Cossler, of Fulton, advocated the 10th of June as the date of the convention.

The latter date (Wednesday, June 10) was, after much discussion, finally adopted for the meeting of the State convention.

Springfield was decided upon as the place of meeting.

After a long and animated discussion, the basis of representation as laid down in the Decatur platform—one delegate to 5,000 people—was adopted.

Prof. Turner introduced the following:

Resolved, That we repudiate the false principle involved in the caucus system of the old political parties; we deny that majorities have any moral or political right to control the personal opinions and independent action of individual citizens, except through duly enacted law; we will send out from our convention no sharks or branded voters—they shall go out as free as they came in—and if any other party desires to gobble up our voters, as the phrase goes, they must take them one at a time and each one by himself.

Prof. Turner made a strong speech in support of his resolution, in the course of which he said that the Republican party down in Bloomington was lost for want of decent opposition. At it was, that great party had for years been opposed only by a hungry pack of jackasses, who followed in its track and licked up its leavings. [Loud applause.] He did not want to revive that party, or any other party whatever, except the party of the people, the party that was against monopoly. The resolution was, on motion, laid on the table by a large majority.

An evening session was held, at which Miss Clara Norris lectured for an hour on the "Iron Master," and was heartily applauded.

The committee to whom the arrangement of the State Convention was referred made the following report, which was adopted:

The farmers, mechanics and other laboring men, as well as other citizens of Illinois who believe as declared by the State Farmers' Association at Decatur, on the 18th day of December, 1873, that, through the departure from the primary principles of our Government, as promulgated by the founders thereof, and through the improvident exercise of that highest prerogative of the freeman, the right of voting, the farmers of Illinois, as well as the other industrial classes, have by past action acquiesced in a system of class legislation which makes the great majority slavishly subservient to a small majority; that this condition is clearly traceable to the fostering protection which has been accorded by our legislative bodies, both State and national, to the financial, mechanical, manufacturing and transporting interests, enabling them to accumulate an undue proportion of the national wealth, and encouraging them in the exercise of the corrupting influences which have become associated with our legislative system; that the preservation of our national life, unfortunately, demands that all American voters shall attend with care all primary nominations and elections, so as to insure the election of competent and honest men to all offices in the gift of the people; that the recent record of the old political parties of this country is such as to forfeit the confidence and respect of the people, and that we are, therefore, freed from all allegiance to them, and should act no longer with them, and counties are hereby invited to send delegates in the proportion of one delegate to every 5,000 inhabitants and fractions exceeding half that number under the census of 1870, to a convention to be held at the State-House in Springfield, on Wednesday, the 10th day of June, at 10 a. m., for the purpose of nominating candidates for State Treasurer and Superintendent of Public Instruction, and the transaction of such other business as may be brought before the convention.

In each county where a County Farmers' Association exists, the President of such association is requested to immediately call a County Convention of delegates from the various townships or precincts on such other basis as, after consultation, he may find most expedient, of the farmers, mechanics, laboring-men, and other citizens of said county in sympathy with the opinions expressed in this call, and such convention is requested to appoint delegates to the State Convention, to take such other action as may be necessary to perfect the organization, and nominate and elect their candidates. In each county where a County Farmers' Association does not exist, the Vice-President for that district of the State Farmers' Association is requested, in conjunction and consultation with the officers of the industrial organizations of that county, to call a convention in like manner, for the purpose as aforesaid. Counties will be entitled to representation in the State Convention as follows: Counties for example: Adams, according to the census of 1870, 56,416, eleven delegates; Alexander, 10,519, two delegates; Pond, 13,155, three delegates.

A motion by Mr. Fitzpatrick, of McLean county, to condemn President Grant for not vetoing the Salary bill and for vetoing the Inflation bill, was tabled almost unanimously.

The convention after transacting some routine busines adjourned sine die.

PARSON LEE.

To a drowsy country village
 Came a certain Parson Lee;
And a man so quaintly different
 From all the other men was he
That the 'Squire himself, the sexton,
 Came to church to hear him pray,
And to note the strange things uttered
 By this marvel of the day.

The eccentric said this planet
 Was a true and goodly place,
And the only thing it wanted
 Was the more of Heaven's grace;
And he sought to show the people
 How to think and work and live,
So that each should help the other
 And unto the needy give;

How the door that leads to Heaven
 Was most amply broad and wide,
And how each could turn the handle
 And go easily inside;
That the very gentlest natures
 In the world may yet be strong;
And how truth is always wisdom,
 And all wickedness is wrong.

He explained how true religion
 Was day-working, nothing more;
That this world was not an ocean,
 Nor we pebbles on the shore;
But that thinking men and women
 Should find better things to do
Than in twisting God's commandments
 Or quite breaking them in two.

"As for acting like our neighbours,
 Why, so none of us are fools;
You cannot be made a Christian
 [illegible]
If your neighbor's not as good as
 He or you would have him be,
Just you go ahead and beat him!"
 Said this candid Parson Lee.

Next, he told them how complaining
 Was a noxious choking weed;
That the flowers scarcely blossomed
 Ere they changed to homely seed;
How that seed again sprang upward
 And bore many flow'rets more;
And that life was ever fading
 And renewing o'er and o'er.

So, this man, by honest talking,
 Worked his wonders in the town;
But he never cared for praises,
 And he laughed at high renown.
Yet the people loved him dearly,
 And they blessed God for the sight,
Till at last the Master left them,
 On a cold, dark winter's night.

Thus he went, they knew not whither
 Have you ever met him, pray?
You would know him by his smiling,
 And the sunshine on his way.
We have hunted o'er Creation,
 Over land and over sea,
But no traces can discover
 Of our missing Parson Lee.

The Latest Fool's Errand.

An interesting cavalcade will pass through the continent this summer. Sergt. Bates, it is said, will on May 10, leave the States for Europe with two ex-soldiers of France and Germany, and, after passing through London, will proceed to Calais. In London arrangements are to be made with an ex-soldier of each of the other countries of Europe to join him in the "Grand International March of the Nineteenth Century." The Sergeant and the ex-soldiers, each bearing the standard of his own country are to march from Calais to St. Petersburg, through the capitals of the continent. Negotiations are in progress to persuade an Irish Home-Ruler to carry the greenflag of Erin. A white silk banner, with the motto "Peace on Earth," is also to be carried—if possible, by a negro. The progress of these standard-bearers will be a magnificent spectacle and will be watched with the deepest interest by the civilized world; but to render the "Grand International March of the Nineteenth Century" a really striking success, Sergt. Bates and his companions should pay a visit with their flags to some regular bloodthirsty barbarians. They are just the customers we want to deal with, we will guarantee them No Middlemen shall eat the profits between them and us. We Retail all goods at Wholesale Prices, all our Teas, Coffees, Sugars, Spices, &c., are purchased direct of the Manufactures and Importers and as we sell direct to the consumers, whereas Middlemen add 50 per cent. to the cost. Some goods, say tea, the Importer sells to the Jobber at 10c per lb profit, the Jobber sells to the wholesale merchants 15c per lb profit, the wholesale merchant resells to the retail merchant at 20c per lb profit then then the retail merchant sells to the consumer at 25 to 50c per lb profit Just as he gets it. All these intermediate profits we give our customers, and this is the secret of our immense tea trade. so with all goods we handle. We sell goods to save the profits of Middlemen

SPARE THAT HOG.

O, Marshal, spare that hog,
  Touch not his lengthy snoot;
But lift that ugly dog,
  And let the porker root.
He's only hunting grubs
  [illegible] fence,
And thumping little shrubs,
  That ain't worth twenty cents.

You say he'll "spile that yard
  And peel that little tree,"
But when he's gainin' lard—
  It makes him plump, you see.
All of my hogs are fat—
  And he's got thirteen head—
And [illegible] way more nor that,
  But doesn't cost me a red.

For I don't keep a pig
  Unless he's on the root,
And willin' for to dig
  His livin' with his snoot.
You say the "walks are sights,
  And many folks object,"
But ain't that hog got rights
  That people should respect.

I want my shoats to run
  And fatten on the street,
So I can make some "mon"
  By selling of their meat.
For buyers, there's a host,
  And when they want a slice,
The folks who fed him most
  Shall pay the highest price.

Select Story.

A Young Mans Misadventures in Search of a Wife.

In the eastern part of Fond du Lac county, Wis., resides a young man, industrious, well-to-do, and of good habits, whose recent experience forms the subject of the present article. He has a nice little farm and some money in the bank, and after he had built him a house, it occurred to him that it would be a good thing to have a wife. accordingly he called upon a neighbor and informed him that he had turned wife hunter, and wanted help. The rest of the story, in the language of the Fond du Lac Commonwealth, runs thus:

"The neighbor promised to help in the search. He new a worthy lady in England She was poor, to be sure, but if she would consent to become a wife she would make a good one; no doubt on that score. He drew a glowing picture of the English girl or woman, for she was more than a girl in years, being beyond thirty-five. Our young farmer hero thought she would fill the bill. It was arranged that both neighbor and farmer should write her. In due time an answer came. She, like Barkis, was willin,' provided the young man would send her money with which to pay her passage to America. That he would do most gladly. A month after the money was sent our hero was at the Fond du Lac depot wating for the train, having been advised that the dear one would make her appearance. She came. They knew each other, having exchanged photographs, She had a friend in the city. For a time her home would be with that friend. Two or three times a week the young man came in to visit the yong man came in to visit the young lady who would soon be his wife. About three weeks after her arrival the young man came to the city to find his lady-love as chilly as a March snow-drift. She hardly spoke to him. Before he started home she deigned to speak to him. What did she say? This: 'Young man, I have made up my mind that I don't want to marry you. Let this be your last visit It is ended, remember; good evening.' Several claps of thunder from an exceptionably clear sky could not have imparted a greater shock to our hero. What did he do? Did he fall on his knees and ask, beg, and pray for mercy? Not at all. He seized his hat and slammed the door, and sought his country home. Thus endeth the first chapter.

"Of course our hero called upon the neighbor who who had recommended the English girl. He was surprised and chagrined almost beyond measure. 'Well', said he I have got you into a scrape. Now you shall have a wife anyhow.' A team was hitched up and they rode a distance of seven miles to the farm house of a gentlemen who was the possessor of five girls. In due time their business was made known. An acquaintance was commenced between our hero and one of the young ladies. The following week he made her the second visit. That time they were engaged, and the wedding fixed for the following week. The wedding day came and the ceremony took place. The happy couple enjoyed life for two or three days, at the end of this time the young man found it necessary to visit the farm and attend to some business, leaving the bride with her folks. Two days passed and he started back to meet his wife. Reader, imagine his surprise upon being met at the door by his wife's father, who informed him that he was not wanted there. He was denied admission. To make bitterness doubly bitter, his wife raised the window and coolly informed him that he need never speak to her again —never for a moment claim her as his wife. What caused this sudden change on the part of the young wife and her people is yet a mystery to the young man and the public generally. But wasn't it strange? Did our hero pine? Not a bit. He drove to Fond du Lac, consulted a lawyer, and immediately instituted proceedings for a divorce He is calm, resolute, and declares that he will have a wife if it takes all of four summers Hence we say truth is stranger than fiction."

The Deacon's Sunday.

"Beautiful! beautiful!" mentally ejaculated Deacon Barnes, at the close of a sermon about Heaven. "Those are my ideas exactly."

And so enrapt was he with his thoughts, as he passed from the church he forgot to ask lame old Mrs. Howe to ride home with him, as was his usual custom.

"Perhaps it is just as well," he tho't "for she is a worldly old woman, and would probably have drawn my thoughts away from Heaven."

At the dinner table his son exclaimed "Oh, father, I have a situation at last."

"Have you forgotten it is Sunday, John?" asked his father sternly. "Don't let me hear any more such talk."

John ate his dinner in silence. How could his situation be a wrong thing to speak of on Sunday? He was so thankful for it that it seemed to come from the hand of God. God knew all about the restless months in which he had answered an advertisement every day.

When the minister gave thanks in church for all the mercies of the past week, John's heart gave a grateful throb, and he determined anew to acknowledge God in all his ways. John ate his dinner in silence, while his father thought about Heaven

In the afternoon Mr. Barnes' nephew, a stranger in the place, came over from his boarding-place opposite, and sat on the piazza, talking with John.

"I can't allow this Tom," said Mr. Barnes, coming to the door with a Bible in his hand; "you must not sit here breaking the Sabbath. Go back to your boarding-house and read some good book."

Tom started up angrily, and spent the afternoon fishing and bathing with an old colored man, his only other acquaintance in the place, while Deacon Barnes sat in a large rocker on the piazza, with a handkerchief on his head, and thought of Heaven.

Presently, his two little grand-daughters came out on the piazza with a large picture-book, and sat down near him. There was a flutter of leaves and a great deal of buzzing as the little yellow heads bent over the book, and finally they laughed outright.

"Children, where's your mother?" sternly demanded Deacon Jones springing to his feet.

"Up stairs, putting baby to sleep," they both answered together.

Deacon Barnes strode into the hall "Ellen! Ellen!" he shouted; "I should think you might keep these children quiet on the Sabbath. They won't allow me to think."

Ellen had been awake all night with a fretful baby. She had hushed him, and had just fallen asleep, when her father's voice aroused her and woke the baby.

"Please send them up stairs," said she, wearily

And all that sultry afternoon she amused the three children in a close upper room; while her father rocked and fanned himself and thought of Heaven.

How We are United.

Little Daughter—"I wish the rivers would rise."

Father—"Why, what have you to do with the river's rising?"

Little Daughter—"A great deal, father, for then the boats will run,"

Father—"And what have you to do with the boats' running, my child, eh?"

Little Daughter—"They would bring the cotton down, father."

Father (looking over his spectacles) —"And what have you to do, darling, with cotton bales?"

Little Daughter—"Why, if the cotton was down you would be able to sell it, you know, dear, dear, father" smilingly.

Father—"And what then?"

Little Daughter—"You would have plenty of money."

Father—"Well?"

Little Daughter (laying her hand on his shoulder and looking up in his face)—"Then you could pay mother that $20 gold piece you borrowed from her, you know, father."

Father—"What then, child?"

Little Daughter—"Then mother could pay Aunt Sarah the $10 she owes her."

Father—"Aye, indeed, and what then?"

Little Daughter—"And Aunt Sarah would pay Sister Jane the $1 she promised to give her New Year's but didn't, because she didn't have any cotton—any money, I mean, father."

Father—"Well, and what else?" (He lays down the newspaper and looks at her cautiously, with a half smile.)

Little Daughter—"Sister Jane would pay Brother John that fifty cents back, and he said when he got it he would give me the half dime he owes me, and two dimes to buy marbles; and that is what I want the rivers to rise for and the big boats to run! And I owe nurse the other dime and I must pay my debts!"

Pa looked at ma. "There it is," he said. "We are all, big and little, like a row of bricks. Touch one, and away we all go, even down to our little Carrie here She has, as a child, as great an interest in the rise of the river as I have. We are all; old and young waiting for money to buy marbles."

THE COLORADO MAUD MULLER.

I.

"Maud Muller, on a summer's day,
Raked the meadow sweet with hay.

Her clustering tresses, backward flung,
Adown her graceful shoulders hung.

Beneath her rustic hat of straw,
Her eyes shot glances that would thaw

An iceberg's frozen heart; or, felt,
Their fire the snow would melt

Upon yon cloud-capped pile, Pike's Peak,
And trickle down his rugged cheek.

Her lips, like ripe, red cherries gleamed;
Her cheeks with health and beauty beamed.

Her hands, oh! dainty brown were they,
And deftly raked the new-mown hay.

Her form, perfection's self enthroned:
A breathing Psyche, golden-toned.

II.

The judge came riding slowly by;
A tear stood in his bright blue eye,

His thoughts were on the checkered past;
Five loves, five graves, and on the last

The wild flowers scarce a fortnight old
His latest, keenest anguish told.

Nor wealth, nor power, nor law's renown,
His stately home in Denver town,

His fellow townsmen's love and praise,
The proudest fame, the greenest bays,

Held aught of happiness for him;
For death, the spoiler, cold and grim,

Had snatched with all their wifely charms
Five loving spouses from his arms.

Ah! wretched man! Five times bereft,
To him what earthly joy was left!

III.

With heavy heart and tearful eye,
The judge came riding slowly by,

When like a sudden burst of light,
"Maud Muller" flashed upon his sight.

Oh! Love, mysterious power divine!
What elasticity is thine!

He gazed entranced. Straight from the skies
She seemed to his enraptured eyes.

A gift from Jove, from heaven sent,
To cheer this vale of discontent.

Such sweet simplicity! such grace!
Such queenly form! such peerless face!

He gazed, he sighed his heart away,
He kneeled before her on the hay,

And breathed a tale of deathless love
That must have moved the gods above.

She softly smiled and looked away,
Still raking up the new-mown hay.

Then paused; and grandly, like a queen,
She pointed o'er the meadow green

To where a stalwart yeoman stood.
"That's Bill," she said; "observe him good!

"Unless you've got uncommon grit,
I guess, old chap, you'd better git!"

OLD 'SQUIRE SKAGGS' JAMBOREE.

The ascent to the bland atmosphere of the editorial rooms of the Morning News is a somewhat tortuous and complicated, and it requires all the sagacity of the young villain who edits our waste basket to safely convoy the casual visitor up the perilous steps. Occasionally, however, there is to be found a self-reliant caller, who scorns to be ushered into the editorial presence, and this was the case with the old gentleman who dropped in upon us yesterday morning.

We were engaged in writing a caustic and damaging reply to an article in the Cartersville Standard and Express on the availability of sassafras tea as a beverage, when suddenly the sanctum door swung open and a stranger entered. He wore a copperas suit, a quilted hat of the same material, and his homespun shirt was adorned with a loose and flowing collar. His boots were of the most substantial species and he limped slightly as he walked. He wore brass mounted spectacles, and carried a cane with a neatly polished horn head. His hair was gray, but his face was ruddy with health, and a jocund twinkle shone in his eye. Before accepting our invitation to one of the hospitable chairs, the visitor looked carefully around the room, placed his hat on the floor, and eyed the newspaper man with considerable intensity. Then he opened the conversation,

"Young man, is this the place whar they print the papers?"

We replied affirmatively, and offered to support our assertion with the affidavit of any number of disinterested persons.

"Well, my name is Skaggs—Squire Skaggs, of Gwinnett. Cousin John Thrasher, at Norcross, knows me like a book. I thought I'd jest drap in an' see how you wuz a gittin' on."

We expressed great gratification at meeting the squire, and then we called his attention to the vile attempt of a correspondent of the Cartersville Standard and Express to supplant Hyson and Oolong with sassafras tea. The Squire looked thoughtful for a moment and then remarked:

"Thar ain't no humbug about sassafac. Next to a hot toddy gimme sassafac. My ole 'oman keeps it continerly on hand. Thar's two kinds of sassafac, the white sassafac and the red sassafac; the red is the kind you git the tea frum. It's mighty warmin'."

Then the Squire paused, adjusted his spectacles, leaned back in his chair and gazed pensively at the lifelike portrait of General Lee which graces the sanctum of the Morning News.

"Sassafac's good enough in its way, but I dropped in to see ef I couldn't git you to print a leetle piece in your paper."

We unostentatiously inquired the nature of the communication.

"You see," said the Squire, pitching his voice to an exegetical altitude, "it was sorter this way. Last Chuseday wuz a week ago, I sailed down to Atlanty with sevin bags of cotton. Arter I sold 'em, I kinder loafed roun' lookin' at things in general, and feelin' jest ez happy ez you pleeze, when who should I run agin but Kurnel Blassengame. Me an' the Kurnel used to be boys together, an' we wuz ez thick ez five kittens in a rag basket. We drunk outen the same goad, an' we got the lint snatched outen us by the same bandy-legged schoolteacher. I wuz gettin' ez lonesome ez a rain-crow, afore I struck up with the Kurnel, an' I wuz glad to see him—durned glad. We knocked roun' town right smartually, an' the Kurnel interduced me to a whole raft of fellers—mighty nice boys they wuz, too. Arter supper, the Kurnel says:

"'Skaggs,' says he, 'less go to my room, whar we kin talk over ole times sorter comfortable an' ondisturbed like.'

"'Greable,' says I, 'an we walked a square or so an' turned into an alley an' walked up a narrer par of stars. The Kurnel gin a little rap at a green door, an' a sick lookin' merlatter popped out an' axed us in. He wuz the durndest perlitest nigger you ever seen. He jest got up an' spun aroun' like a tom cat with her tail afire. The room wuz ez fine ez a fiddle, an' I thought to myself that the Kurnel wuz a lugsuriant cuss. Thar wuz a lot of mighty nice fellers scattered roun' a laffin' an' a talkin' quite soshabel like. Aperiently the Kurnel wuzent much sot back, for he sorter laffed to himself an' then he says;

"'Boys,' sez he, 'I hev fetched up a fren', Jedge Hightower, this is Squire Skaggs, of Gwinnett. Major Briggs, Squire Skaggs,' an' so on all roun'. Then the Kurnel turns to me an' says:

"'Reely, I wuzent expectin' company, Skaggs, but the members of the Young Men's Christian 'Sosashun make my room ther headquarters.'

"I ups an' says I wuz mighty glad to meet the boys. I used to be a Primativ' Babtis myself afore I got to cussin' the Yankees, an' I hev allus had a sorter hankerin' arterpious folks. They laffed an' shuck han's over agin, an' we sot thar a smokin' an' a chawin' jest as muchuel as you please. I disremember how it cum up, but presently Major Briggs gits up an' says:

"'Kurnel, what about that new parler game you got out the other day?'

"'Oh,' says the Kurnel, lookin' sorter sheepish, 'that wuz a humbug. I can't make no head nor tail outen it.'

"'I'll bet I kin manage it,' says Jedge Hightower, quite animated like.

"'I'll show you how, Jedge, with pleasure,' says the Kurnel, 'an' then he went to a table, unlocked a box an' tuck out a whole deck of keerds an' a whole lot of little whatyoumaycallems, similar to horn buttons, some white an' some red.'"

A broad smile illumined the classical features of the newspaper man, and Squire Skaggs stopped and supplied his tireless jaws with a fresh quid of tobacco.

"It ain't no use to tell you any more. When them fellers got done larnin' me that game I didn't have money enough to take me down-stairs. I lay an' looked a little wild, for when the Jedge closed the box he smiled an' said:

"'We hev had a pleasant evenin', Squire. You'll find the Kurnel waitin' for you on the steps, an' he'll give you your money back!'

"I ain't never laid eyes on the kurnel sence, an' when I do thar's goin' to be a case for the kurriner—you mind my words. I seed Rufe Lester next day—you know Rufe; he's in the Legislatur now, but I used to give him pop corn when he wuzen't so high—I seed Rufe an' he sed I wuz tuck in by the pharoah men. Tuck in ain't no name for it. Darned ef I didn't go to the bottom an' git skinned alive. I couldn't go home 'thout givin' some account of my cotton money, an' so I thought I'd come down here an' sorter cool off, an' I jest drapped in on you this mornin' for to see if you wouldn't put a leetle piece in the paper remarkin' as how I wuz in Savannah lookin' arter my farm supplies."

Whereupon, we framed the following and read it to the Squire:

"We were pleased to meet in our sanctum yesterday Squire Skaggs, of Gwinnett, one of the most prominent and prosperous planters of Northern Georgia. Squire Skaggs is of the opinion that he can purchase produce in this city cheaper than in any other market in the South, and consequently he is here for the purpose of laying in his farm supplies. This is a very hopeful sign, and we trust that other agriculturists of that section may be induced to follow the Squire's example."

The Squire's face beamed with pleasure and satisfaction as we read the glowing periods of the foregoing paragraph.

"Well, ding my skin! that's just as natural as life. Now, young man when you get that printed in style, you'd oblege me mightly ef you'd send it to Amanda Skaggs, Buford Postoffice, Gwinnett county, Georgy, an' if thar's anything to pay, I'll pay it. Dern the expenses."

Here the Squire put on his hat and made other preparations looking to an early departure.

"I ain't gwine back to Atlanty. I'm gwine frum here to 'Gusty, an' from Gusty to Athens, an' then I'm gwine cross the country ontwell I strike A'r-Line, an' twon't be healthy for any feller to holler Pharaoh at me."

The Squire rose, felt of his pockets, looked carefully around to see if he had dropped anything and started toward the door. We made a last endeavor to bring up the sassafras controversy.

"Ding ef I don't disremember which is the best for tea," said the Squire, "but I'll ax my ole 'oman. What she don't know about sassafac ain't wuth wastin' your breath on. Far'well, young man. You won't forgit to print that piece?"

We said we would'nt and we didn't, and we sincerely trust the Squire will be satisfied when he sees it with its present surroundings.—Savannah News.

THE HOLY SCRIPTURES.

The Scriptures have been translated into one hundred and forty-eight languages and dialects, of which one hundred and twenty-one had, prior to the formation of the British Foreign Bible Society—never appeared. And twenty-five of those languages existed without an alphabet in an oral form. Upward of forty-three millions of these copies of God's work are circulated among not less than six hundred millions of people.

The first division of the Divine orders into chapters and verses is attributed to Stephen Langton, Archbishop of Canterbury, in the reign of King John, in the latter part of the twelfth century or beginning of the thirteenth. Cardinal Hugo, in the middle of the thirteenth century, divided the Old Testament into chapters as they stand in our translation. In 1661, Athias, a Jew of Amsterdam, divided the section of Hugo into verses—a French printer had previously (1561) divided the New Testament into verses as they now are.

Horrible Atrocities in the Argentine Republic.

The Panama Star and Herald gives a fearful account of horrible crimes which have recently been enacted by the military heroes of the army of Lopez Jordau. The scenes which it describes were, it states, witnessed by one Don Emilio Victoria, who was made prisoner, and taken, with six others, to the camp at Querencio. They were then ordered to march under a guard of twenty musketeers, commanded by a brother of Hermosi, to where Querencio was, on the other side of Gualeguay. When they arrived at the farm of St. Augustin, a Senor Euclides Irigoyen came out to meet them armed with a lance, and, approaching the officer, said: "Why do you make these people suffer so much? Anyhow, I know you have orders to kill them on arriving at the forest, so you had better let us kill them at once." The officer refused to agree to his proposals. As soon as they had reached the came of Querencio, Chamorro was made fast. Again next day the order came that all the prisoners should be dispatched. They began with Chamorro, who was lanced to death. My turn was to come next, when an order came to bring me before Querencio, which was done. Later on in the day he delivered me over to Lopez Jordan, who kept me with him until his defeat by Don Gonzalo. All the chiefs had orders to kill whom they pleased. Lopez Jordan ordered his victims to be dispatched after insulting them in the vilest language. Others, such as Gonzales and Campos, would address one of these unfortunates, "Who are you?" So and so. "Where from?" "Entreriano." "Kill him, he is a savage." The executioner then stepped out to do his duty. Each chief had his own executioner. He drew his weapon, and in a few seconds the head of a poor father of a family rolled on the ground. Such were the common every-day assassinations.

This is especially the case where there is a grown-up daughter in the family. We publish this item at the earnest request of several young men, who are directly interested in this matter.

A milliner and hair-dresser in Texas has hanging in her window the scalp of a young Indian squaw, with long black hair pendant. Anything to draw custom. There is a man in Central, Col., who matches this by keeping an Indian chief's scalp hung up where he can pound it with a club whenever he feels illy toward the race, which is about three times a day on an average.

The greatest bell in the world, the "Emperor William Bell," destined for the Cologne Cathedral, has just been finished. It weighs about 60,000 pounds, is 18 feet high, and 14 feet wide. The first molding of the bell proved a failure, and considerable difficulty has yet to be overcome in transporting the immense mass from Frankenthal, where it was cast, to the top of the tower of the Cologne Cathedral.

An Ashantee Bull.

The most curious relic of the Ashantee campaign brought home by the newly returned troops is said to be a Cape Coast bull, a perfect kitten of the species. He is described as not so tall as an umbrella, and, judging from his build and activity, might be as safely trusted to perambulate the fragile groves of a crockery warehouse as the most docile dog. He was allowed to be lose on the deck, and is the pet and plaything of the crew, who tease him until he runs at and butts them as the goat does. Twelve of these animals were shipped as fresh food on the voyage, and some idea may be formed of this representative of Liliputian "live beef," when it is stated that of the eleven that were killed not one exceeded 47 pounds in weight as a dressed carcass.

The annual insurance report of the Auditor of the State of Illinois, shows that the fire-insurance business of Chicago has been immensely profitable to the insurance companies for the last two years.

The New Panacea.—Modern science having demonstrated that alcohol is "neither food nor physic," but, on the contrary, a species of poison, the introduction of a potent tonic which is entirely free from it is certainly a subject for congratulation. Dr. Walker's Vinegar Bitters is a medicine which may be fairly characterized as an unobjectionable specific for many distressing and dangerous diseases.

Temperance organizations, heretofore in favor of permitting the sale of alcohol for medical purposes, are of opinion that Vinegar Bitters possesses all the efficacy as an invigorant that has ever been even claimed for spirituous stimulants, and on this account, as well as because of the singular success which has attended its use in dyspepsia, liver complaint, disorders of the bowels, nervous diseases, general debility, and all maladies growing out of intemperance, they warmly recommend it as a restorative and alterative of surpassing excellence. 43

Liver and Blood Diseases.

A healthy liver secretes each day about two and a half pounds of bile, which contains a great amount of waste material taken from the blood. When the liver becomes torpid or congested, it fails to eliminate this vast amount of noxious substance, which, therefore, remains to poison the blood and be conveyed to every part of the system. What must be the condition of the blood when it is receiving and retaining each day two and a half pounds of poison? Nature tries to work off this poison through other channels and organs—the kidneys, lungs, skin, etc., but these organs become overtaxed in performing this labor in addition to their natural functions, and cannot long withstand the pressure, but become variously diseased.

The brain, which is the great electrical center of all vitality, is unduly stimulated by the unhealthy blood which passes to it from the heart, and it fails to perform its office healthfully. Hence the symptoms of bile poisoning, which are dullness, headache, incapacity to keep the mind on any subject, impairment of memory, dizzy, sleepy, or nervous feelings, gloomy forebodings, and irritability of temper. The blood itself being diseased, as it forms the sweat upon the surface of the skin, it is so irritating and poisonous that it produces discolored brown spots, pimples, blotches and other eruptions, sores, boils, carbuncles and scrofulous tumors. The stomach, bowels and other organs cannot escape becoming affected, sooner or later, and we have as the result, costiveness, piles, dropsy, dyspepsia, diarrhea. Other symptoms are common, as bitter or bad taste in mouth, internal heat, palpitation, teasing cough, unsteady appetite, choking sensation in throat, bloating of stomach, pain in sides or about shoulders or back, coldness of extremities, etc., etc. Only a few of the above symptoms are likely to be present in any case at one time. The liver being the great depurating or blood-cleansing organ of the system—set this great "housekeeper of our health" at work, and the foul corruptions which gender in the blood and rot out, as it were, the machinery of life, are gradually expelled from the system. For this purpose my Golden Medical Discovery with very small doses daily of my Pleasant Purgative Pellets are pre-eminently the articles needed. They cure every kind of humor from the worst scrofula to the common pimple, blotch or eruption. Great eating ulcers kindly heal under their mighty curative influence. Virulent blood poisons that lurk in the system are by them robbed of their terrors, and by their persevering and somewhat protracted use the most tainted systems may be completely renovated and built up anew. Enlarged glands, tumors and swellings dwindle away and disappear under the influence of these great resolvents.

WISHART'S

PINE TREE TAR CORDIAL

Nature's Great Remedy

FOR ALL

THROAT AND LUNG DISEASES!!

It is the vital principle of the Pine Tree, obtained by a peculiar process in the distillation of the tar, by which its highest medicinal properties are retained. Tar even in its crude state has been recommended by eminent physicians of every school. It is confidently offered to the afflicted for the following simple reasons:

1. It cures,—not by abruptly stopping the cough—but by dissolving the phlegm and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter causing the irritation. In cases of seated consumption it both prolongs and renders less burdensome the life of the afflicted sufferer.

2. Its healing principle acts upon the irritated surface of the lungs, penetrating to each diseased part, relieving pain, and subduing inflammation.

3. It purifies and enriches the blood. Positively curing all humors, from the common pimple or eruption to the severest cases of Scrofula. Thousands of affidavits could be produced from those who have felt the beneficial effects of Pine Tree Tar Cordial in the various diseases arising from impurities of the blood.

4. It invigorates the digestive organs and restores the appetite.

All who have known or tried Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's remedies require no references from us, but the names of thousands cured by them can be given to any one who doubts our statement. Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Great American Dyspepsia Pills and Worm Sugar Drops have never been equalled. For sale by all Druggists and Storekeepers, and at

Facts Worth Remembering.

WHITING is unequaled for cleaning white paint without producing injury to it. Put a small quantity on a damp flannel, rub lightly over the surface, and the result will be most satisfactory.

FOR weak eyes, put a piece of alum about the size of a hazel-nut and a piece of lump sugar the same size into a quart of cold spring water, and stand near the fire to dissolve; then saturate a little lint with the mixture; bathe the eyes several times a day; destroy the lint immediately after using, as it must not be put into the lotion a second time.

THE right way to sweep is to incline the handle a little forward, then give a light drawing stroke, allowing the broom to scarcely touch the carpet. Not one-half the weight of the broom should be allowed to press on the carpet as the dirt is moved forward. Let the the dirt be moved and lightly rolled. If a generous quantity of tea-grounds, small bits of wet paper, or clean and wet sawdust can be spread over the carpet before the sweeping is commenced, all the fine dirt will adhere to the wet materials.

REMEDY FOR SORE THROAT.—Take one large red pepper, such as are grown for family use, steep in half a pint of water, after which strain in a quart of molasses, adding a little vinegar; boil all together to a thin sirup; use this whenever the throat feels dry or disagreeably; if it be in dead of night, it will soothe the throat (and not irritate) and warm it up well. If sharper than can be borne in the mouth, put it back near the palate with a spoon and swallow; apply outwardly a thin slice of salt pork, warming it up well in vinegar and pepper; apply as hot as can be borne on the throat; fasten the bandage that holds the pork over the head, to draw the cold and inflammation up and not about the neck, as most people do.

TONICS FOR WOMEN.—Nothing makes a woman age more rapidly than overwork—the reason, probably, that American women fade so soon. Sunshine, music, work and sleep are the greatest medicines for women, who need more sleep than men. Their nerves are more sensitive and they are not so strong, and exhaustion from labor or pleasure takes place sooner with them than with men. Never permit yourself to be roused out of a deep sleep in the morning. In fact, one should never be wakened. The body rouses of itself when its demands are satisfied. Take a warm bath occasionally before going to bed—at least once a week. Retire as soon as you feel sleepy in the evening. Don't rouse yourself and go to work. You need rest then, and will pay for the trespass on your physical nature the next day if you disobey.

ABSTINENCE WHILE ILL.—A certain class of people fancy, when any member of the family falls ill, that all that is necessary to coax them back to health is plenty of food. When a young man has surfeited in season and out of season, until exhausted nature gives way, and a fever is coming on, the good mother is in trouble. She anxiously inquires, "Now, John, what can you eat? You must eat something! People can't live without food!" Then comes toast and tea, etc. The stomach is exhausted, and no more needs stimulating food than a jaded horse needs a whip. Nine-tenths of the acute diseases may be prevented by a few days' starvation when the first indications appear. I don't mean complete abstinence in every case, but perhaps a piece of coarse bread, with cold water for drink. If such a policy was generally adopted, what ruin would overtake the medical profession, how many physicians would lack for patients!

CLEAN TEETH.—If you only keep your teeth clean they won't decay. The wonderful dentifrices which are sold at fabulous prices are inferior to a simple mixture of soap and prepared chalk, with a little something like orris root; but the essential articles are soap and chalk. The druggist will prepare you enough for a quarter of a dollar to last a long time. When you go to bed, with a broad, soft tooth-brush go through the mouth thoroughly. If disposed to a bad mouth, you must repeat the dose in the morning. But the principal article for keeping the teeth clean is a toothpick, a soft goose quill, which you must use after eating, no matter though it is a piece of apple, and if convenient, after the pick use a mouthful of water to rinse from between the teeth what the toothpick may have left.—Dio Lewis in To-Day.

Dreams.

Some philosopher, who evidently knows how it is himself, interprets dreams as follows:

If a man dreams the devil is after him, it is a sign he had better settle his subscription bill.

If he dreams of an earthquake, and a turmoil generally, it is a sign that he is going to get married.

If he (being a married man) dreams of some fearful mysterious danger, it is a sign that his mother-in-law is coming to spend a few days with her darling daughter.

If he dreams that his head is in danger, and his hair all falls out, it is a sign that he had better know all the policemen.

If he dreams of making a fool of himself, it is a true sign that it is so.

A SPITZBERGEN "COLD SNAP."—Says a writer: "No description can give an adequate idea of the intense rigor of the six months' winter in Spitzbergen. Stones crack with the noise of thunder; in a crowded hut the breath of the occupants will fall in flakes of snow; wine and spirits turn to ice; the snow burns like caustic; if iron touches the skin it brings the flesh away with it; the soles of stockings may be burned off your feet before you feel the slightest warmth from the fire; linen taken out of boiling water instantly stiffens to the consistency of a wooden board; and heated stones will not prevent the sheets of the bed from freezing. If these are the effects of a climate within an air-tight, fire-warmed, crowded hut, what must they be among the dark, storm-lashed mountain peaks outside?"

FOUR hundred vibrations per minute is as much as a bee's wing can do.

Indigestion in Calves.

Calves when carelessly fed or managed, are very much subjected to indigestion. They become dull and pot-bellied, and thriftless in appearance, their appetite capricious, their bowels irregular, and their faces pale colored, sour and badly smelling. When such are neglected, troublesome diarrhea is apt to follow. The ailment usually depends upon the accumulation of sour curdled milk in the fourth stomach, which is the one used while the young animal is fed upon milk, and does not ruminate. Laxative medicine must therefore at once be given. For a three-months-old calf the dose may consist of two ounces castor or linseed oil, to which may be added half an ounce each of carbonate of soda and ginger. If the animal is weakly and scouring, ten or fifteen drops of laudanum may be added. For a few days, until indeed recovery is established, an ounce each of common salt, carbonate of soda, and ginger may be given night and morning in a little milk; or where the calf is flatulent, dull and weak, an ounce of salt and half an ounce each of carbonate and sulphate of soda may be administered twice daily. The diet, as in all such cases, must be carefully attended to. If unweaned, the calf should have its milk fresh and sound, thrice daily. A daily allowance of linseed gruel or bruised linseed cake will further be serviceable. Comfortable shelter, a dry bed and plenty of room are also essential. When protracted indigestion appears to result from weakness, and the mucous membrane has become irritable and relaxed, advantage frequently follows the use of eight or ten drops each of muriatic acid and creosote, given every morning until it abates.

Journalism.

Newspapers are getting to be much more than mere transcripts of the news and gossip of the day. They are pioneers in learned explorations; they are foremost in geographical and historical discovery; they are the teachers of social science. They are no longer satisfied with disseminating the knowledge laboriously collected by savants, by travelers, by experiments in natural philosophy; they must pursue their investigations, and send their agents into all the half-explored fields of science and adventure.

The reporter of to-day is the adventurer who penetrates the desert and the jungle, the scholar who searches for relics of the forgotten past, the courier who bears the news of victory to courts and congresses across a wilderness and through hostile armies, the detective who pries into public abuses and discover hidden wrongs, the pioneer who throws new countries open to the world, the philanthropist who unbars the door of the torture-chamber, the chemist who detects adulterations in the spice-box, the inspector who seizes false weights and measures, the auditor who exposes a theft in the public treasury.

Journalism busies itself now with every thing that effects the public welfare. It trenches upon the province once sacred to the scholar, and supplies the defects of an inefficient government. Year by year its ambition becomes larger, its purpose more beneficent, and its means more abundant; and we can hardly doubt that it is destined in a very short time to be the foremost of all the secular professions—the most powerful in its operations, the most brilliant in its rewards, and the most useful to mankind.

Hairy Men.

An account appears in the Edinburgh Medical Journal of the two remarkable hairy men, Russians, who have excited so much interest in Europe. The peculiarity of these individuals is that they have an excessive growth of hair upon one particular part of the body, namely, the face and neck; on the body and lower extremities there is also a stronger growth of hair; and particularly on the back and arms of the son (the two being father and child) there are sundry patches of 0.15 inch to 0.24 inch in diameter, covered with soft yellowish white hair, 0.12 to 0.24 inch long. The father has on his body isolated patches strewn, but not thickly, with hair one-fifth to two inches long. But all this is slight and subordinate compared with the hair growth on the face. The father has only the left eye-tooth in the upper jaw. The son has no teeth, hardly any alveolar process, and the upper lip is very narrow, so that the upper jaw appears depressed; the father presents the same appearance. Every part of the face and neck, usually covered with down, is in their case covered with long hair—even the eyelids—while flowing locks come out of both nostrils and from the ears.

The British Army.

It appears from a Parliamentary paper just issued that in 1862 the British land forces were at the highest numerical strength, numbering a total of 222,839 of all ranks; this force reached the lowest ebb of 180,444 in 1870, chiefly in consequence of reductions in foreign service. Of 28,426 men who enlisted during the last year comprised in the return in the United Kingdom, as many as 10,919 failed from various causes to join the colors; and it appears that in the last five years included, the ratio of deserters has increased fifty per cent. Last year fines for drunkenness were inflicted in 51,501 cases; that is, about one fine to every four men, with an average of two fines for each offender. Of the total strength in 1872—namely, 182,568—the percentage qualified by length of service and superior attainments for good-conduct badges was sixty-five. As regards height, the English soldiers contrast favorably with the armies of the continent, the proportions below and above five feet seven inches being 415 and 585 in the thousand men.

THE distilleries of the country, last year, produced over 68,000,000 of gallons of spirits. There were 445 of them in which about $70,000,000 capital was invested, 70,000 men employed, and nearly 20,000,000 bushels of grain consumed, four-fifths being corn. The spirits produced yielded nearly $50,000,000 tax to the Treasury. Illinois is the chief producer, and the Western States distilled more than five-sevenths of all the spirits made.

Character of the Rothschilds.

The four original houses remain, though they have agencies and interests in all the leading cities of Europe, Asia, and Africa, as well as North and South America. They have belted the globe with their operations, and are in the fullest sense universal and cosmopolitan bankers. For generations they have been Barons, and the title is hereditary in their family. Since the death of old Mayer Anselm, they have added the distinguishing de and von to their names, and are as far removed from democratic affiliations and sympathies as if it were a thousand instead of a hundred years since their ancestors counted kreutzers and old rags in the Jundengasse of Frankfort. They have always been devoted to their theological faith, and strict in observing all the forms of the synagogue. They are not without superstition in their creed, believing that much of their good fortune has come from their unswerving fidelity to Judaism. Their charities to their co-religionists have been many and liberal. They have endowed schools, built hospitals, and founded almshouses. Their attachment to their ancient form of worship is noble and commendable. They cannot help remembering how bitterly their people were persecuted for ages, and how very recent it is that they have been allowed to enjoy either political or civil rights. Long after Mayer Anselm had grown rich, he and his fellow-Hebrews were locked into the Jews' quarter of Frankfort after nightfall, and forbidden to depart thence until the iron gates were thrown open in the morning. If the great bankers have forgiven the inhuman wrongs done through centuries to their race, they are singularly magnanimous. They have reason to feel as Shylock felt to Antonio toward the fawning Christians who go to them for money. Their negative revenge cannot be without sweetness when they think that the once despised and hunted Jew has had the proudest nobles begging for his gold, and even Kings soliciting his aid. It has been their boast that monarchs could not go to war without the consent of the Rothschilds. Like most boasts, this was not strictly true; but they who furnish the sinews of battle are the most desirable of allies, not less than the most formidable of foes. The Rothschilds, save at rare intervals, continue to intermarry, and are likely to while the powerful family holds together. If the common theory respecting the union of blood-relatives were true, the banking brotherhood would be reduced by this time to hopeless imbecility; and they are in the opposite extreme.—Harper's Weekly.

The Great Jefferson Cheese.

In 1801, the ladies of Cheshire, Mass., made a mammoth cheese, weighing 145 pounds, which was presented to President Jefferson as a token of their esteem and confidence. The person selected to present this cheese was the Rev. John Leland, a Baptist minister celebrated at that day. The ceremony was performed at Washington, D. C., on the first day of January, 1802, with a good deal of parade, Elder Leland making the presentation speech and the President standing in his door to receive it—several clergymen and a crowd of spectators being present to see and hear. The cheese was started from Cheshire in November, 1801, being carried carefully to Hudson, N. Y., and from there shipped on board a sloop bound for Georgetown, D. C. It arrived safely at Georgetown, and, a few days before the presentation, the "great cheese," as it was then called, was taken from Georgetown to Washington in a wagon drawn by six horses, and attracted a good deal of attention along the way. On the day of presentation it was taken from a house on Pennsylvania avenue by a dray drawn by two horses and carried to the President's house. Elder Leland left his home after the mammoth cheese had been shipped, and preached all the way to and from Washington, wherever he stopped, being generally spoken of and talked about as the "mammoth priest"—a great deal of curiosity having been aroused to see and hear the man whose name had been made famous by its connection with the great cheese.

AN editor, says Josh Billings, iz a male whose bizness iz to navigate a nuzepaper. He writes editorials, grinds out poetry, inserts deths and weddings, sorts out maneskrips, keeps a waste-basket, blows up the "devil," steels matter, fites other people's battles, sells hiz paper for a dollar and fifty cents a year, takes white beans and apple sass for pay, when he can get it, raises a large family, works nineteen hours out uv every twenty-four, knows no Sunday, gets cursed by everybody, and once in a while whipt by sumboddy, lives poor, dies middle-aged, and often broken-hearted, leaves no money, iz rewarded for a life uv toil with a short but free obituary puff in the nuzepapers.

A GEORGIA minister boasts a family of thirty-two children, and when he takes them all to church on Sunday's they occupy four whole pews, and even then slop over into the aisle. As a consequence, their views of divine worship are simply pew-or-aisle.

THE ELASTIC TRUSSCO.

Was incorporated in 1868. Its friends and patrons are from every land and speak every tongue. It has outlived all rivalry. It has conquered the prejudice that was justly caused by all the metal trusses. It has grown stronger and firmer as the years have marched apace, and, like a giant, its arms encircle the world. There must be some potent reason that has produced this wonderful result. That reason is the simple fact that the Elastic Truss is worn night and day, with comfort, retaining rupture in perfect ease, causing no inconvenience, can never be displaced by the hardest exercise, yielding and adapting itself to every motion of the body, but always holding the rupture safely, and soon effects a perfect and permanent cure. This new and wonderful invention has produced a radical revolution in treating Rupture and has absolutely driven out of use all the wretched metal finger pad and spring trusses that formerly cursed the community and made life a burden to so many thousands upon thousands of suffering ones, who now are happily enjoying once more the blessings and comforts of existence.

The United States Government and Surgeon-General at Washington have arranged with the Elastic Truss Co. to supply their new Truss to such Pensioners, Soldiers, &c., as are entitled to a Truss and may desire it. Such persons may apply to any one of the U. S. Pension Surgeons throughout the country. Full descriptive circulars with directions, &c., sent free on request, and the Truss is sold cheap and sent by mail to all parts of the country by THE ELASTIC TRUSS COMPANY, 683 Broadway, New York.

Ayer's Ague Cure,

FOR THE SPEEDY RELIEF OF

Fever and Ague, Intermittent Fever, Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, &c., and indeed all the affections which arise from malarious, marsh, or miasmatic poisons,

R Has been widely used, during the last twenty-five years, in the treatment of these distressing diseases, and with such unvarying success that it has gained the reputation of being infallible. The shakes, or chills, once broken by it, do not return until the disease is contracted again. This has made it an accepted remedy, and trusted specific, for the Fever and Ague of the West, and the Chills and Fever of the South.

Ayer's Ague Cure eradicates the noxious poison from the system, and leaves the patient as well as before the attack. It thoroughly expels the disease, so that no Liver Complaints, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Dysentery or Debility follows the cure. Indeed, where disorders of the Liver and Bowels have occurred from Miasmatic Poison, it removes the cause of them and they disappear. Not only is it an effectual cure, but, if taken occasionally by patients exposed to malaria, it will expel the poison and protect them from attack. Travelers and temporary residents in Fever and Ague localities are thus enabled to defy the disease. The General Debility which is so apt to ensue from continued exposure to Malaria and Miasm has no speedier remedy.

For Liver Complaints it is an excellent remedy.

The English newspapers are growling about the Geneva Arbitration, Perhaps they want some of the other kind?

* * *

M. Goulard is still hammering and pounding away, trying to patch up a Cabinet for McMahon. There is still a ray of hope for the French Republic.

* * *

And now here comes a gleaming ligh through the midnight darkness. Rev. Meekham, of Green Bay, says that it is his belief that most of the editorial fraternity will eventually be saved.

* * *

Brooks refuses the President's meditation, and the Arkansas unpleasantness may be expected to go on until the Killkenny cat catastrophe comes to pass. As appearances go, there wouldn't be much loss if both factions should wipe themselves out, provided the people escape.

* * *

The President has finally decided to sustain Baxter as Governor of Arkansas and has notified Brooks to abandon his troops. Federal soldiers are being sent to Little Rock to be used in the interests of Baxter, if such an emergency should arise.

* * *

Mr. Allen G. Thurman, a distinguished citizen of Washington, who owns $500,000 worth of Government bonds, is one of the gentlemen who enjoyed the extreme felicity of witnessing the nuptials of the President's promising daughter.

* * *

Governor William Allen, is sound on the financial question of the hour. Allen G. Thurman isn't. That's the difference between two distinguished citizens of Ohio whose names present themselves to us "between sherry and champagne," at this moment.

* * *

The Senate has adopted a new resolution providing for the adjournment of Congress on the 22d of June. This is indication, at least, of an early adjournment, and of the impossibility of enacting a new currency law during this session.

* * *

It is rumored that the new ministry selected by Serrano will be favorable to the claims of Alfonso, This proves what might have been expected all along. A republic in Spain means simply anarchy and endless wars among the factions, The people are now willing perhaps to receive again a monarch of the house of Bourbon.

* * *

Indianapolis women were heard in Congress yesterday. The plea for sober men in office was read in Congress and "referred." Imagine the sarcastic laughter of the ghetlemen on reading the artless document. Most of them fond of toddy and many of them perpetual inebriates. A poor show for temperance there, ladies.

The King of the Canibal Islands has had a streak of good luck. By the treaty stipulations between Great Britain and the Fiji Islands, the King is to have a salary of $15,000 a year. The regal splendor of your Fiji Monarch in his normal condition is not particularly dazaling. His wardrobe consists of a few skins in winter, and a fig leaf or so in the summer time, while his diet is comprised of roots, varied with an occasional lean missionary. For $15,000 a year he can live very comfortably, albeit his wants will be multiplied a thousand fold by the new civilization which the protectorate of Great Brittin will bring with it.

* * *

Paul De Cassagnac, the editor of Le Pays has been writing an abusive article concerning the Duc de Chartres, for which the latter challenged him. Cassagnac is a veteran duellist: He has fought or bullied every respectable journalist in Paris at one time or another. He is as fearless as a lion, and very expert with the small sword. The Duc de Chartres is of the house of Orleans, and is a military man of no mean reputation. If he fights with Cassagnac it is to be hoped that he will disable the ruffian.

The Arkansas Legislature are about to take signal revenge on Senator Clayton for his part in the recent attempt to install the usurping Brooks. The name of Clayton county is to be changed to something else, probably Baxter or Grant. A man who will plot against the life of the State does not deserve to give his name to a county or anything else. Clayton may thank his lucky stars that he gets off with an unbroken neck or with his person free from perforations. The gentle Arkansans have no foolishness in their make up, and many a better man than the illustrious Senator has passed in his checks for a far lighter offence.

NELLIE GRANT'S WEDDING.

On the 22nd inst, the brilliant wedding of the above took place at Washington. Mr. Algernon Sartoris is twenty-three years of age. and Miss Nellie is nineteen. There were many different dresses described by various papers which are "too numerous to mention." Her wedding dress was satin, and such a one as royal princesses can afford to wear. The two point lace flounces that cover the skirt were selected from the looms of Brussels, and are the finest and most costly that could be procured. The dress has a train three yards long. This train will come in play when the little Sartoris' begin to come, and we hope they will be in time to see their Grandpap's big purpe.

The railroad war in Wisconsin has come to a practical issue. The Bangor grain men have formed a covenant to pay the rates provided by law, and nothing more. The Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad company demand their rates or they will carry no freight. Of course the company can run empty cars if it chooses. Whether the railroad is powerful enough to refuse the shipping business of the people of Wisconsin, except on their own terms, remains to be seen. The loss to the companies will be immense, and will be likely to bring about some sort of a settlement before long. It will fairly test their power of endurance and their ability to sustain a war to the knife with the business men of the State.

The Czar of all the Russias has reached England. He was met at the landing by Victoria's entire household prominent among which were the Edinburghs. There is no doubt that Marie Alexandrova was accorded a place of honor on this occasion. After the usual amount of hand shaking, kissing, inquiries after health and remarks about the weather, the party repaired to the palace. The people had been privately instructed to cheer lustily for Marie as she passed through the streets of London, and they did it with a will. No doubt the Czar is gratified. The public is painfully anxious to hear how the question of rank between Marie Ediaburg and Alexandra Wales is to be decided. Let the cable do its whole duty in this crisis. Let there be no shirking of this vital topic.

Secretary Richardson, it is thought, will resign. The results of the Sanborn inquiry have killed him exceedingly dead. So far he has bore up bravely, ignoring what all the world was continually talking about. He has laid the flattering unction to his soul, that at the last pinch he would escape scot free. But his investigators are merciless. Mr. Kasson, of Iowa, has actually introduced a motion of censure in the Committee of Ways and means, which will of course be passed without any trouble. This last straw will break the camel's back. Richardson is not so ignorant as not to know that this will compel his resignation. He has therefore been consulting his friends who advise him to resign at once. Poor Richardson! His fall has, indeed, been tremendous.

One hundred and forty-five lives were lost by the breaking of the Mill river dam. The dam is now to be inspected thoroughly. A party of competent experts will examine those walls, and if it is found that they were flimsily constructed, they will doubtless say so, and the newspapers will give those mill owners such a raking as they have not had lately. In this way public indignation will find a harmless vent. Then the affair will gradually pass into oblivion, to be dragged out a year or two hence when another dam breaks with a like terrible result. There are many of these mountain reservoirs in New England, comprising the possible conditions for many repetitions of the Mill river horror.

Unless the owners of these profit by the terrible example of Mill river, an investigation will do little good.

What shall be done with the dead? our larger cemeteries are full. A portion of them is paroeled out and sold to pa rons a perpetuite, but for those who are unable to pay the price the limit is five years, and although the dead may be left a little longer, they are soon driven out, the ground is overturned, and room is made for others. The bones of all the poor who died ten years ago now lie in one common heap, and once more the cemeteries are filled.

But the soil refuses to do its work any longer. It has become saturated, and will no longer absorb. The graves are now dug in a mass of putrefaction, and exhalations are constantly rising to poison the living. Only a thin layer of earth separates the graves, and a few days ago a young and beautiful girl the idol of her home, was lowered into a grave which filled the minds of every assistant with horror. A stream of liquified putrid matter was running in from the grave beside it. Two gravediggers recently struch too near when opening a grave, broke open a coffin, and died in a few hours from the poisonous exhalations. Great precautions have to be taken in digging ordinary graves, for, as I have previously stated, the ground is thoroughly saturated, and can absorb no longer. The condition of the atmosphere and of the water in this vicinity is something horrible to think about, and it is not astonishing that the sickly quarters of the city should be near these great cemeteries.—New York Times.

TO THE DELINQUENT TAX PAYERS OF DeKALB CO. IND.

Be it known that the delinquent list from the tax duplicate of 1873, is now in my hands for collection and will pass into the hands of my deputies on Monday the 15th day of June 1874, until then taxes may be settled at the Treasurer's office with the simple penalty of ten per centum and interest added. Afterward there will be other costs and charges added, whether payment by made to the collector in person, or to the Treasurer. There will be further charges in case of collections by sale of goods and chattels, and the legal fees for posting notices. Bear in mind that no tax can be settled without the lawful fees after reaching the deputies hands, and no Treasurer or Deputy, dare accept the fees without the tax. In complience with the late law of the State of Indiana the deputy collectors will be compelled to enforce payment at once upon receipt of the lists. The new law further provides that the deputies as well as the Treasure, have the power at all times to levy on the personal property of delinquents, wherever such may be found, to satisfy both land and chattel tax. The law provides that when property fails to sell where first offered, it may be removed to some other township and again exposed to sale. Deputies will be responsible under bond and oath for the return of every dollar collectable by law. The new law compels Treasurers to collect the tax of delinquents where there is personal property that he can levy on to make such tax if he fail to make such tax when it can be done in this manner, he will have to pay the whole amount himself at his settlement with the Auditor of his county. Now let me kindly urge each delinquent tax payer to avail himself of this timely notice and call and settle his tax account before the 15th day of June 1874 as the Treasurers are bound under the new law to show no favors to any one.

Very respectfully your obedient servant,

NICHOLAS ENSLEY, Treasurer.

Pioneer Sketches

—OF—

DeKALB COUNTY

NUMBER THIRTEEN.

I was appointed by the Governor, sheriff of the new county, with authority to appoint the place for the elections, in the few precincts in the county, and to receive and forward the returns. The result of the election has already been stated in the "Pioneer Sketches." After the organization of the county, my house served as Court House—Jail—Hotel—Church—Cookingroom—Sleeping apartment, &c. As sheriff appointed, and afterwards elected. I had no jail but the upper chamber of my cabin. I used to put prisoners up, and then take away the ladder and tell them to stay there; and they always did so. The lower chamber was the court house. During the sitting of court, it had to suspend until dinner was cooked. This gave the Judge time for a nap, which was very desirable, as he was generally fatigued. and sometimes rather "boozy." Charles Ewing was the president Judge. He was brother to the celebrated fur traders, W. G. & G. W. Ewing. Judge Yates, has been spoken of as an odd genius of a backwoodsman. One day he got "tight," and sentenced Jo. Bashford, to receive a whipping, and swore that as he was the court, and had passed sentence, he would inflict the penalty. As the Judge was making towards the criminal with this avowed intention, I seized him, and giving him a whirl, told him plainly that if the court persisted in inflicting the penalty threatened, the sheriff would put the court "up the ladder." Upon this, the court acknowledged the authority of the sheriff, and adjourned peaceably.

Will you allow me now to go back to the winter of 1836-7, and relate some incidents of that hard winter? There were now about thirty families in the county, and many of them suffered severely; having to bring all their provisions from Fort Wayne, or the Northern prairies, with scarcely anything that could be called roads. At one time our corn cost $3 per bushel! I saw teams that had to travel 75 miles for provisions. I never drove more than sixty miles for corn, beyond Fort Wayne up the St. Mary river. It was a trying time for me and my wife, but she was always cheerful. I took the rheumatism and lay several weeks. In December the snow fell two feet deep. Emigrants were still coming in. A man woman and child left Pleasant Lake, with a wagon and a yoke of cattle, to go ten miles south of Auburn. One of their oxen mired down, in Smithfield Township, eight miles north of Auburn. There was then no house between Steubenville and Auburn. The mired ox died, and they turned the other loose, and started for Auburn afoot, carrying the child. The waters were then high, and they had to wade the small streams. About nine o'clock at night, they reached our cabin with their clothes frozen above the waist. We gave them dry clothes and a warm supper, and kept them until the roads was broken. A few minutes after the arrival of these sufferers, a traveler came in and told us that a man and boy were out in the trail about six miles, in a suffering condition; not being able to strike a fire, and the man so frozen as to be unable to travel. On receiving this information, Wesley White and Wm. Palmer, got up the pony and started for the sufferers. They found the man on section 9, Town. 34, Range 13. (We always counted by sections as the trail was very crooked.) They got him on the pony, and brought him in, about midnight, frozen to the knees; yet he contended that he was not cold, We got his legs into a tub of spring water, and then drew out the frost. But the boy must yet be saved. The old man offered us "fifty cents (!) to bring him in which led me to administer him a severe reproof. I told him if the boy was not worth more than fifty cents, he was not worth bringing in. He was then ten miles out, in snow two feet deep, among swamps filled with water, and swollen streams. No money, however, was needed to induce us to go to his rescue. He had kept traveling and was thus saved from freezing. They proved to be Mr Graden and son, of Noble County. They had left home in pursuit of cattle. The snow commenced falling and they traveled on through Fairfield, and until they struck the trace, and knew not which way to turn. They were well provided for at the cabin, and in a few weeks, were able to return home.

Wesley White, who was so active in the above rescue, was a good man. He had come down from Lima to stake out some lots. He afterwards went to Sparta, Noble county. He was deputy clerk for Isaac Spencer, and afterwards clerk of Noble county. After thus saving the life of others, he was drowned in Elkhart river, west of Albion. William Palmer was a rather mischievous old bachelor, and loved to play pranks on the Indians; who used to annoy us considerably—though they furnished us with venison, Bear meat, Turkeys &c.—for money or such things as we had to exchange.

Editorial Excursion.

WASHINGTON, D. C. May 17th, 1874.

Dear Courier—The Indiana Editorial Association have just returned from a pleasant visit to the Soldiers Home this forenoon, and I thought I would drop in a few lines to keep you posted as to our progress. The evening of my arrival at Indianapolis, the 13th, the citizens there gave us a reception, consisting of a fine musical entertainment under the direction of Mr. Benham followed by a pleasant dance which was a splendid affair. The next morning, we started for Cincinnati, took dinner at the Gibson House at one o'clock We met a delegation of Editors from New York, at the Chamber of Commerce and afterwards we were furnished with carriages and taken to Spring Grove Cemetery Clifton, and other points. Cincinnati treated us very kindly, and Deacon Richard Smith of the Gazette, entertained us at his beautiful residence with a fine collation in regular pic-nic style. At ten o'clock that night we went to the depot, where three palace cars were in readiness to take us on our way over the Baltimore and Ohio. This is a grand old route and the beautiful scenery in through the mountains and along the valleys interests and relieves one from what would otherwise be a wearisome journey. The road is excellently managed and trains make splendid time. I never saw better time made on any road. We came through on a special train, but a regular one was just in advance, and often we dashed around the mountain sides at the rate of fifty miles an hour. We arrived at Harper's Ferry in the afternoon, and saw the historic points of the place. After a few hours ride we were greeted with a sight of the city of magnificent distance, our NATIONAL CAPITOL.

We were taken to the famous Willard Hotel, where we now are living in grand style at half price—$2.50 per day. The Indiana residents here turned out in good order, and received us with open arms. Saturday morning we held a short meeting, and laid out a programme. At ten o'clock we went to the

and were presented as an association to President Grant, and then individually introduced, each indulging in a shake of his hand. He looked very pleasant, and made one of his characteristic speeches, the principal feature of which was brevity. After that we visited the Treasury, War and other departments, and then went to the capitol, where we were extended the courtesies of the floor of the House, the Senate not being in session. It was a grand sight at first to see the assembled wisdom of the nation, but it did not last so long, and we soon were in a study whether we would accept a seat in that body or not. You see there is something higher here, and then it is not the most pleasant life in the world to be a Congressman. No wonder our Representative, Mr Saylor, is tired of his first term. Those who remain at home, and have no means of knowing what falls to the lot of a Congressman, may be led to believe that it is an easy, pleasant and agreeable position, but a few days' visit at the capitol would soon convince them to the contrary. There are a few who take it easy, and do not care about a prompt discharge of their duty. They shirk the work they were commissioned to perform. But a real live, earnest Congressman has an average of from twelve to fifteen hours of hard labor to attend to almost every day. The work in the regular session is nothing compared to their committee duties and correspondence. Letters by the dozen are received from their constituents every day, some of which may require a visit to several of the departments, from one to two miles apart, before they can be answered.

Mr. Saylor has done hard work, and has a creditable standing in the House. In fact, the Indiana delegation, as a whole, cannot be excelled by any other State. Our Senators and Representatives gave us a reception last Saturday evening, which was a most pleasant affair. Senator Morton made the opening address in a very neat and well-timed speech, followed by Senators Pratt, Holman, Orth, Wilson, Niblack, Tyner, Shanks, and Speaker Blaine. President Grant was present, and made a few remarks. This ended with a dance, in which the fashion of the city joined.

Sunday has been spent in visiting the Soldiers' Home, Arlington Heights, the cemetery, and a drive about the city. To-morrow we go to Mt. Vernon, visit the the Senate, and then to Baltimore. I have just seen Jno. L. Davis, Esq., the special correspondent of the Fort Wayne Gazette, who seems to be enjoying himself, and is becoming quite popular at the capital. I told Grant to keep an eye on him, as I thought he was after an appointment.

Our excellent friend, Billy Williams, had us in a carriage yesterday, showing us the city, and his handsome block of houses that he has just erected. Mr. W. is very popular here, and is a genial, clever fellow, though he is of rather a speculative turn of mind. He has made some money while a member here, and don't try to disguise the fact that it did not all come from his salary.

But I must hurry this to the postoffice, or you will not get it in time. Tom.

Its warm now and the big girls can go barefooted.

Get up out of the grass, or you will stain your pants. "Dot vas too din."

Two of our shoemakers went partners on five cents worth of sulpher to cleanse their blood. They spit and "spewed" for a few hours, and were satisfied that something was accomplished. Lew Vordermark can tell you more about it.

For the benefit of those who are ignorant of the fact, we will say that it is not only impolite but strictly against the usages of a printing office, for people to look over the copy, or in other words, to read what the compositor is setting up.

"Faul" is the German word for lazy, but here is the way we heard it expressed the other day by a German. A friend asked him why his sister did not work. He says because she was to darn rotten. Faul is also translated as rotten.

The other day a german who is just learning to speak the English language was offered a raw oyster and after taking it in his mouth and spitting it out in his hand several times, exclaimed "Ich can't eat das, ich must break em.

Farmers complain of the coming wheat harvest, and are "certain" that they will not get half a crop. We never saw a farmer that said we would have a good crop of wheat when spring first opens.—We have saw several fields of wheat and think them as good as anyone would ask for.

Speaking of fish culture, which is attracting wide attention at this time, the difficulty in this State of raising is not as great as that of protecting them. There is said to be a defect in the law which intends to prohibit the seine, by which fishermen evade the penalty if the fish are sold in a different county from that in which they are caught,

Laporte Argus, says "Last Saturday 20 members of Kingsbury Grange went to the farm of Mr. Staples a lately deceased member of the order, and planted a field of corn for his widow. The party carried their dinner, of which a worthy Matron, Mrs. Kitty Travis, took charge and gladdened the hungry laborers with some of her own fine cookery.

The Baltemore Road is now completed through our place, and as far east as "the river." The contractors on grading are about done work, and the bridges are nearly completed. Before long trains will be running and Auburn can boast of three first class railroads. Many "new comers" are locating at the south end, and we expect ere long to see Auburn grow southward at least two.

Exercise in the open air is a good thing but it is well for parents to be considerate and not permit their boys to exercise too freely. Some boys cannot saw a stick of wood without inducing a head-ache; yet they can play ball with charming regularity. If left free to choose for themselves, we are satisfied that our boys will not injure their helth and impair their usefulness by sawing wood.

The Courier has always been the temperance organ of this county, and the friend of all moral reforms, is opposed to all species of vice, and advocates all methods whereby humanity may be elevated. Ever family in the county should take it as we think it worthy of the confidence of the people. Send us your name and try it for six months and you will not do without it afterward. For one year it is $2, six months $1.

Potatoe bugs have more patience and endurance, and less regard for the welfare of the human family, than any other brute now invented. After living all winter without food, they have settled down on the little, green, unsavory new potato tops, and are quietly notifying us that next spring we can't have potatoes even if we are willing to pay any price for them.

The Fort Wayne Fruit House has reduced the price of Coffee 3 cents on the pound If you will keep an eye on the advertisement you will always find a reduction on some article. Capt. White is on the look-out, week in and week out.

From reports we judge that some prominent men are encouraging the demoralizing habit of street loafing after night.—We hear of several of them who perambulated the streets after mid-night Sunday morning. What, with the example of christian men and women standing around on street corners after the dead hour of night, will not the youths justify themselves in following up this detrimental practice?

A man by the name of Adams, formerly an engineer in the employ of the Pan Handle Company, committed suicide by hanging at Crown Point one day last week.

The celebration of the I. O. O. F. at this city on the 11th of June promises to be a grand affair. Excursion rates, it is thought will be given on all railroads leading into the city, and a great many special invitations have been extended to neighboring lodges. Schuyler Colfax delivers the oration.—Logansport Pharos.

We have not been advised as to the progress of the preparation for the celebration of the Fourth of July, but understand that an effort will be made to ascertain the fact as soon as possible. If they succeed we may expect the grandest occasion ever held in Auburn. The American Eagle will shriek his best, and the two bakeries will prepare a ton of ginger-bread, and several stands of lemon-peelings put into barrels of water will be "set up."—Nothing can prevent a huge time. Every body, will of course, come. No imported orator or chaplain or other ornaments to the occasion will be in demand.

A Card.

To all we tender our kindest regards for the liberal patronage we have received and would state that we have a full stock of good fresh family groceries, confectioneries etc. We have now in our employ one of the best bread and pastry bakers in Northern Indiana, Mr. Butler, in whose line of bread and pastry, we shall hereafter make a specialty. We invite all to call and examine for themselves.

Dead Harts.—There are many dead hearts in the old world and the new.—Many men and women who are mere automatons; who eat, drink, and sleep mechanically. Crushed long ago by the weight of a great sorrow, they go through the world all unconscious of its joys.—They are insensible alike to its pleasures and its pains. The bright, glad sunshine does not charm, nor does the dark tempest appall them. They pay no attention to their surroundings, and heed not passing events. A terrible railroad collision, an extensive conflagration, a disaster at sea, or any accident whereby the lives of scores of their fellow-men are sacrificed, does not quicken the pulsation or blanch the cheek. They are not blessed by friends, or annoyed by enemies. The little world in which they move is unmindful of their grief—unmindful, because ignorant. Homeless, friendless, alone, they live apparently resigned to their fate.—They have no little vices—no great virtues. They ask no sympathy; they invite no confidence. They never smile; they never frown. Immovable as the chiseled marble, their features are to-day as they were in the days of the long ago when a great sorrow crushed out all of life—save barren life itself—and the tottering brain was saved by the sacrifice of the withered heart.

It has been well said that "a shattered brain or a withered heart is often the result of a great sorrow." Our readers will recognize, in this community, more than one man who is unmindful of his surroundings, rendered so by the crushing weight of a terrible grief; more than one heart desolate and "dead as the ashes of a long extinguished fire."

DREADFUL CALAMITY.

Three Villages in Massachusetts Swept Away—One Hundred Lives Lost.

BOSTON, Mass., May 16.—Three great water reservoirs, situated in Hampshire county, Western Massachusetts, along the line of the New Haven and Northampton railroad, burst this morning, completely sweeping away the three manufacturing villages of Leeds, Haydenville and Williamsburgh. Scarcely a building is left standing. At last account 100 lives had been lost.

The reservoirs were used to supply the streams in that vicinity in dry seasons, but the heavy rains last night burst them. They were situated three, eight and ten miles, respectively, from Haydenville.

Not a house is standing in Williamsburgh. At this writing the waters are subsiding. The destruction of property is not less than $10,000,000.

The villages affected by the disaster are Williamsburgh, Haydenville, Leeds and Florence, located on Mill river, a tributary to the Connecticut, running into the latter at Northampton.

The mills on the stream have all been carried away, and included brass-works, button-hole factories, silk and cotton mills, brush factories, agricultural implements, and basket factories, etc., besides saw and grist mills. The manufacturing capital invested along Mill river is estimated at $5,000,000, and the immediate damage effected is $4,000,000. The valuation of Williamsburgh, a farming and manufacturing town, is nearly $700,000, personal, and the number of dwelling-houses in both Williamsburgh and Haydenville, which is a settlement in that town, was about 500.

LATER.

NEW HAVEN CONN., May 17.—A 24-inch pipe in the town of Great Ashfield reservoir, above Williamsburgh, Mass., has been leaking for weeks, and some people had shaken their heads and said the dam must be attended to or it might break. It did break yesterday morning. The masonry around the outlet gave way, and then all in a minute, as if a piece had been bitten out of the dam, a great wall of water seemed to spring up into the air and leap out into the sink below.

The standing joke of Mill river valley, "Look out, the dam is broken," was proved no joke at last. The torrent was upon Williamsburgh in ten minutes, and sent its spray above trees 60 feet high. It crunched one house like paper, and killed a woman and her two children; then another, and another. It swept away the woolen-mills, and rushed on at the rate of 20 miles an hour. As it came raging down the valley, it dug up houses and swallowed them in an instant, leaving no trace; and tree-butts and great stones came down with the flood. The mountain of water, roaring like a thunder-storm of hail, reached Skinnerville and lifted the silk mills upon its shoulders before shredding them into bits.

At Haydenville it swept away the factory in a moment. At Leeds it came down, a wall of water faced by an abattis of timbers, trees and iron boilers, which struck the village in full front.

There was an hour and a half of flood, and then ebb, and at noon those who had escaped came back in crowds to see the ruin. It was an awful sight. Houses were crumpled like twisted paper, trees stripped of their bark and limbs, even when their roots clung to the soil.

The beautiful valley is a waste of mud and muddy water laden with distorted and strange shapes. Great boilers have been carried hundreds of yards, and left crushed together and buried.

The loss of life is now set at 140, and the loss of property at $2,000,000.

The gate-keeper of the reservoir says he has lived in constant expectation of a break, and has often called the attention of his superiors to its unsafe condition. The accident has caused great apprehension among the residents along the west branch of Mill river, of which the Goshen reservoir is the head, and which joins the east branch at Williamsburgh. It is in all respects similar to the Williamsburgh reservoir.

To-day, a petition unanimously signed was sent to the company owning it, asking to have it emptied at once and the dam strengthened. Popular apprehension ran so high that citizens threatened to take the matter into their own hands and break the dam. The company promised to do what is necessary at once.

The Arkansas Troubles.

LITTLE ROCK, May 15.—Some skirmishing and movement of troops by both sides occurred this forenoon, and continued till 1 o'clock. After that the streets were quiet until nearly 3 o'clock, when it was reported in Baxter circles that he had been recognized by the United States Government, and that fact soon becoming known on the streets, there was much excitement, but it was nothing compared to the furor that was made when the Gazette extras were issued containing the proclamation. Crowds of Baxter soldiers filled the streets, yelling at the top of their voices, some throwing their hats in the air, and others rushing from point to point, conveying the news.

Crowds of Gov. Baxter's friends called to congratulate him, his room at one time being nearly full of Senators, Representatives and citizens; and even whole companies of soldiers went up to pay their respects to him.

The Legislature adjourned immediately after receiving the proclamation, and reading it—which was done in both houses, amid the wildest excitement, some of the members getting up in their chairs and shouting for joy.

Brooks has received official notice of the recognition of Baxter by the Federal authorities, and has sent several of his friends to confer with Gov. Baxter as to the best method of disbanding and providing transportation for his forces, some of which leave for home on the trains to-night. In order to avoid a collision between the two it is proposed that but one party shall occupy a train or boat at a time.

Gov. Baxter has issued to his citizen soldiers a congratulatory address, very mild in its expression, thanking them for their prompt espousal of his cause, and assuring them of his gratitude therefor, and at the same time counseling moderation in all their actions and feelings toward those who had taken up arms against him.

ITALIAN CITIES.—One remarkable feature in Italian cities is that you see no new buildings in course of erection, growth in that respect having apparently ceased. A new street is being opened, broad and serviceable, from the square of Carlo Felicie, in Genoa, directly to the fortifications of the city, in its course destroying one or two private palaces of no mean pretensions, and of centuries in age. King Victor Emanuel has taken a lesson in this respect from Napoleon III., and this is the fourth or fifth boulevard which he has opened lately in Genoa, which has for centuries been famous for its narrow and almost inaccessible streets. It is no exaggeration to say that one-half the streets of the city are so narrow as to render the passage of a vehicle through them simply impossible; everything of size and weight delivered therein is brought on the backs of donkeys, or more commonly on the heads of women.

Cosmetics.

To render the skin clear and soft bathe the entire body daily, if possible, in water of the temperature most agreeable in its effects upon the bather. Cold bathing is injurious to many people who are benefited by a bath in tepid water in a room of moderate warmth. In every case it is better to rub the entire surface of the body till it is in a glow, and then cover according to the season, always wearing clothes enough to keep the body comfortably protected when away from the fire. Eat temperately, avoid heavy suppers, concentrated dishes, such as rich puddings, pastries and cakes; eschew pork, which is an enemy to a transparent complexion; decline hot bread, gross meats and rich gravies, and exercise freely in the open air. Gluttony and indolence are foes from which beauty always retires in inglorious defeat.

To give expression to the eye, cherish as the increased practice of the soul a love for truth, for the divine beauty visible in the world all around us, for heavenly charity, for whatever is noble and pure and just, and, in the nature of things, imperishable. This will give luster to the dullest eye and light up the plainest face with the fires from God's own altar.

To give an erect and graceful carriage, live with a high aim and a noble purpose. This may be but to make the heart nearest you supremely happy; the purpose—to lift it by all the ministries of suggestion and love nearer and nearer the faultless ideal. Or it may have a wider range and a larger scope, looking toward the elevation of the degraded, the education of the ignorant, and the comforting of the afflicted. Living for one's self stamps the bearing with an impress from which everybody shrinks and turns away. The unspoken consciousness of the selfish person writes itself in every feature and in every gesture, even as self-forgetfulness and lofty resolution make their own proud mark, read of all men, on those whom the nations delight to honor.

To perfect the shape of the hand, even when marred, use it in giving and in deeds of mercy. This will throw over it a halo that will conceal misshapen joints, efface labor stains, straighten crooked fingers and make them tapering and rosy-tipped.

To clothe the whole person with attractive grace, cherish an abiding faith in the goodness and mercy of God, and cultivate a warmth and active good will toward all men. Charity covereth the multitude of defects.

Can anyone in whom all these cosmetics have perfectly wrought be other than divinely beautiful and altogether lovely?—New York Tribune.

Different Kinds of Eyes.

No branch of science has been more thoroughly mastered than optics. The principle of vision must be essentially the same in all eyes, but they differ remarkably according to the habits of the animal. Birds of lofty flight, as the condors, eagles, vultures and carrion-seeking prowlers of the feathered race, have telescopic visions, and thus they are enabled to look down and discover their unsuspecting victims. As they approach noiselessly from above, the axis of vision changes—shortening, so that they can see as distinctly within one foot of the ground as when at an elevation of one mile in the air.

This fact explains the balancing of the fish-hawk on its pinions, half a mile above a still pond watching for fish. When one is selected down the savage hunter plunges, the focal axis varying always to the square view of his intended prey. As they ascend, the axis is elongated by a curious muscular arrangement, so as to see far off again.

Snails have their keen eyes at the extremity of flexible horns, which they can protrude or draw in at pleasure. By winding the instrument around the edge of a leaf or stalk, they can see how matters stand on the opposite side.

The hammer-headed shark has its wicked-looking eyes nearly two feet apart. By will or effort they can bend the thin edges of the head, on which the organs are located, so as to examine the sides of an object the size of a full-sized codfish.

Flies have immovable eyes. They stand out from the head like half an apple, exceedingly prominent. Instead of smooth hemispheres, they have an immense number of facets, resembling old-fashioned glass watch-seals, each one directing the light directly to the optic retina. That explains why they cannot be approached in any direction without seeing what is coming.

Civilization.

"What is to be the future of Africa?" "Will the negro be civilized?" To these questions Sir Samuel Baker, the great English traveler, replies in his late speech at the Royal Pavilion, Brighton, by a very seasonable word of advice and rebuke. It has, says Sir Samuel, taken eighteen centuries to bring the Briton to his present civilization, but "the grand advance has been made in our own lifetime." Within a century and a half witches were burnt in England; and within two centuries torture still was a British institution. And yet, adds Sir Samuel, "our great grandfathers were as proud of their civilization as we are of ours, in spite of what we think now of their penal codes and social manners." Our railways, steamships, electric telegraphs, our gas lamps, our photography, date from yesterday or the day before; the great improvements in the science of astronomy, chemistry and mechanics are almost of to-day. Let us, therefore—in the words of the great traveler—"not boast of our civilization, but only of our progress toward a desired end." Indeed, the question whether we are as yet quite civilized might fairly be asked of ourselves. The ignorance, vice and brutality found in our great cities should certainly teach us to be a little more modest in our pretensions, and a little less inconsiderate in our impatience of the slow process of civilizing, or at least improving, savage negro tribes.—Inter-Ocean.

Remarkable Experience of a Boston Lawyer in a Haunted House.

The Boston Herald revives the haunted house sensation at Springvale, Me., by telling the story of one Edw. H. Mulliken, a Boston merchant, who braved its horrors on Thursday evening, in a spirit of curiosity. Shortly after 8 o'clock he was entranced, and remained in that condition till midnight, when he retired to a lounge in an adjoining room. During the trance he communicated several facts in connection with the building, stating that a terrible murder had been perpetrated upon the premises at some previous time. At 3:30, when the room was lighted, the door opened, and a large, thick-set figure entered, approached the sofa, and inquired the time; also if the watcher was resting well, placed his hands on his shoulder, and suddenly vanished. Noises were heard at intervals, nowise traceable. Subsequently the figure returned, repeated his previous inquiries, the light still burning, retreated an instant and appeared, brandishing a huge club above the watcher's head. Paralyzed with horror, Mr. Mulliken cocked his pistol, took deliberate aim at the figure, but the weapon refused to do its duty. Instantly substituting a fresh cap, a second attempt was equally unsuccessful. Terrified, he arose, but the figure had vanished no more to return. Nervous and agitated, he remained till morning, when he surprised the tenants with his experience, not, however, more marvelous than they had themselves witnessed; and was equally surprised to learn of his entrancement the previous evening, he having been unconscious of it. The spirits warned the inmates not to allow Mr. Mulliken to retire to an upper apartment, stating that the effects might have proved fatal to one of his temperament. Mr. M. is no advocate of Spiritualism, and regards the whole affair as unaccountable. His experience has awakened a fresh interest in this mystery.

Servant-Galized Americans.

Lucy H. Hooper, writing from Paris to the Philadelphia Press, relates some dire experiences of Americans with their domestics. She says: "The experience of one gentleman really merits special mention. His wife discovered one day that the greater part of her underclothing had disappeared, as well as a valuable jeweled watch. The police were called in, search was made, and the missing undergarments were found in the trunk of the lady's maid, as well as a variety of other articles abstracted by her from the stores of former employers. The woman was arrested and committed for trial. When the trial took place her counsel adopted a novel but extremely successful line of defense. 'Gentlemen of the jury,' said he, 'the parties that have come here to prosecute my client are Americans. They are wealthy; they could very well afford to supply this poor woman with underclothing; she did not steal the things; she needed them, and she merely took them. Moreover, the lady was culpably careless in leaving her drawers and trunks open to expose my client to temptation; and besides, as I said before, these people are rich Americans, so I hope you will acquit the prisoner.' The jury did acquit the prisoner immediately, whereupon she turned round and sued her employer for false imprisonment, and he was obliged to get a permit from the police to enable him to quit France, he being on the point of returning home with his family."

Arsenic Eaters.

It seems almost incredible that any person can be guilty of the madness of resorting to the use of poisons, either internally or externally, for the purpose of improving the complexion. Arsenic in any form in which it is used—although not in a pure metallic state, and before oxidation—is a terrible poison. If taken in sufficient quantities, it causes death after excruciating suffering. In small doses it produces very unpleasant effects, and undoubtedly shortens life. The habit of eating arsenic once confirmed cannot be broken off. A person is to be looked upon as idiotic who will deliberately adopt the practice of taking such an injurious and dangerous drug, merely for the purpose of whitening the skin. But there are other substances much more commonly used than arsenic for their effect upon the complexion, which are also highly deleterious. Many of the cosmetics which are sold contain lead, and there are few poisons which produce results more to be dreaded than those occasioned by lead. Even as used in hair-dyes, it occasions neuralgia, paralysis, suffering and death. Seek good looks by seeking health; by early rising, outdoor exercise, wholesome food, a clear conscience and the cultivation of a cheerful temper, and not by the use of arsenic or any other poison.

ONCE WHEN YOU WERE A BOY.—One by one the "pleasures of childhood" are fading into forgetfulness by reason of the innovations of modern ideas. The youth of to-day can know nothing of the real, solid comfort of having a circus in his father's barn, assisted by a talented company of the neighborhood boys, and, rigging up in long stockings and colored jackets, balancing on a flour-barrel until he falls off and peels his nose and skins his shins, and accuses the other boy of kicking the barrel, and pitches into him and gets another black eye and a lacerated ear, when the show ends at the close of the second "act" amid a general scene of ruin, compared with which the "last days of Pompeii" sink into insignificance.

FARM AND HOME.

Farm Notes.

COME boys, I have something to tell you;
Come here, I would whisper it low;
You're thinking of leaving the old homestead,
Don't be in a hurry to go.
The city has many attractions,
But think of the vice and sins;
When once in the vortex of fashion,
How soon the course downward begins!

THE farmer should be an educated man. Formerly all necessary qualification was physical development.

FARMERS must arrange so as to cultivate their farms without having their houses crowded with hired help.

DO ALL work as cheaply as possible this year, but do it thoroughly. The prospect is good for remunerative prices, if economically produced.

THE CHECK-REIN.—Why is it that so many of our farmers, and nearly all of our city carters, insist upon using a tight rein on working horses? When a horse, left to his natural inclination, has a heavy load to pull, he can best exert his back-bone in one continuous line, and this he will invariably do if not prevented by a tight check-rein. Some claim that it prevents the horse from falling down, and when a man can raise himself over a fence by a lift on his suspenders we will believe it. When a horse fails, a tight rein will most effectually prevent him from getting on to his feet again. Try it without the rein, and see if we are not correct in our practice and theory both.

WASTED FERTILIZERS.—The Farmer's Home Journal says: On every old place in Central Kentucky there are such things as old wood-piles, where chips have accumulated and decomposed for fifty years; then there are old piles of ashes sometimes three or four feet deep, which have been accumulating for the same length of time; then there are old straw piles and heaps of stable manure which have never been hauled out; and there are deposits under the hen-roosts, sometimes two feet deep, which are equal to the best Peruvian guano, and when these are all hauled out, we will go to an inexhaustible supply of rich molds and alluvial deposits of decayed vegetable matter, which have been collecting for ages, in places on branches and creeks which run through most farms. We have still another supply yet, in the muck mud, which, if dug out in the summer time, when the marshes and swampy places are dry and hard, can be hauled close to, if not quite to, where it is wanted, and the winter freezing will pulverize it and put it in fine condition for a crop the next season.

PRESERVING POSTS.—Every farmer who has to fence his land knows too well how quickly posts planted in the earth become rotten, especially in a damp spot. All of them will welcome the following process to prevent rottenness, a process as wonderful in its effects as it is simple and almost costless. It is taken from Le Bien Public, of Dijon, France:

"Take linseed oil, boil it, and mix it with charcoal dust until the mixture has the consistence of an ordinary paint. Give to the post a single coat of the mixture or paint before planting them, and no farmer, even living to the age of the patriarchs of old, will live long enough to see the same posts rotten.

"'Some years ago I discovered a way of rendering wood more durable in earth than iron itself,' says the author of the communication, "but it seemed to me so simple and so inexpensive, that I did not think it worth while to make much ado and fuss about it. Posts of soft wood thus prepared were removed after remaining seven years in the earth, and were found as sound as when planted. The only precaution to take is to use only well-dried posts before covering them with the charcoal paint.'"

FARMERS' FOOD.—In the last report of the Massachusetts Board of Health, Dr. J. F. A. Adams, of Pittsfield, one of the most accomplished physicians in the State, has presented a long and valuable report upon the health of farmers, in which he combines his own experience with that of the leading physicians in the State, to whom he sent circulars containing twenty questions, to which they responded. Dr. Adams concluded that the following are the diseases to which farmers are most liable, and the liability is in the order named: First, rheumatism; second, dyspepsia; third, fever; fourth, acute lung affections; fifth, consumption. In answer to the question: "What causes tend to injure the health of farmers and their families?" overwork is mentioned as the first, improper diet the second, exposure the third, sanitary defects in barn-yards, hogpens, privies, drains, cellars, etc., rank as the fourth cause; want of ventilation the fifth; want of recreation, cleanliness, and other causes are mentioned, but the first four are the principal.

Upon the subject of farmers' diet, Dr. Adams comes to several conclusions, the full force of which our Western farmers will appreciate fully. It is not insinuated that wives of Western farmers are inferior to their sisters at the East in the practice of the culinary arts, but they have been so long in the habit of preparing the meals in just such a way that it is difficult to make a change. As to farmers' diet, Dr. Adams arrives at these eight conclusions:

1. Good bread is scarce, and is too often made with some unwholesome substitute for yeast.
2. There is too little variety in food.
3. Meat is too apt to be fried.
4. Baked beans and salt-pork, although a highly nutritious dish, are too generally used, being indigestible for many persons.
5. Pastry and cakes are used to a highly injudicious extent.
6. Too little time is allotted for meals.
7. Coffee and tea, especially the latter, are too freely used as beverages.
8. Water is used in excess.

Dr. Paddock's remarks on this point are these:

"The food of farmers is usually soaked in fat. Beefsteak is fried to a crisp in fat; nearly all other meats are fried, and I think a larger proportion of farmers are dyspeptic than any other class. They need better bread, rare-cooked meats, less fat and grease." To the frying of meats so fashionable among farmers, the testimony of the physicians is unanimously opposed. Beef and mutton are recommended as the best meats, and veal and pork are condemned as unfit for staple articles of diet. Dr. Adams thus sums up the testimony on the matter of diet: "More fresh and less salt meat; less frying and more boiling, broiling and roasting; a greater variety of vegetables and fruits; less pies and cakes; more wholesome well-kneaded bread raised with yeast; less tea." We have space only to refer to one more point, and that is the badly ventilated rooms in which many farmers sleep, and the feather beds on which they lie. On this point Dr. Lawrence tells the story in a few words: "As a general thing, farmers sleep in the poorest rooms in their houses, which are very small and poorly ventilated. Feathers are an abomination."—Exchange.

The Household:

CHAMPAGNE HAM.—Boil the ham very tender, skin and cover with brown sugar, moistened with champagne. Repeat three times and brown in an oven. Slice cold.

A NICE DESSERT.—Grate into a dish a layer of cocoanut, then place a layer of quartered oranges and sprinkle them with sugar. Continue alternating until the dish is full, with a grating of cocoanut on top.

THE Country Gentleman recommends linseed oil meal for horses that are never allowed to run out to grass, being slightly aperient. A handful in each feed, morning and evening, is about the quantity usually fed.

RUSK.—Three cups of sweet milk, one cup of yeast, one cup of sugar, mixed over night with flour enough to make a stiff batter. In the morning add one cup of butter, one cup of sugar, add cinnamon and soda. Mold and let them rise before baking.

TO DYE GREEN.—Boil the article first in alum-water for an hour, then for three hours in a preparation composed of four ounces of verdigris, two quarts of white wine vinegar, and four quarts of water.

HAIR OIL.—One pint of alcohol; two ounces of castor oil; a few drops of perfumery. Shake well to cut the oil. This is said to be a splendid and nicely-perfumed hair oil; it softens the hair, promotes its growth, and prevents it from falling out.

FRENCH MUSTARD.—A fine French mustard, called moutard superbe, is thus made: Salt, one and one-half pounds; scraped horseradish, one pound; garlic, two cloves; boiling vinegar, two gallons; macerate in a covered vessel for twenty-four hours, strain, and add enough of mustard to make a rather thin paste.

SOME egg-raisers claim that the best use for skimmed milk is to give it to hens to drink; that it is worth twice as much for this purpose as for feeding hogs; and that by its use in winter, chickens will lay constantly. This must be their only drink; and let them have access to it at all times.

CALLA lilies, it is said, can be made splendidly thrifty for indoors in winter, by a summer-baking accomplished thus: In June, place the pots containing them on their sides under a tree, or in a shady place, and there leave them, without attention, until September. The leaves will, of course, fade away, and the earth in the pot drop and harden almost to the consistency of brick. Upon being taken indoors in the autumn, and watered thenceforth daily, the plants will soon start into vigorous growth and bear noble flowers all winter.

Bird Song.

To be sure, birds sing as naturally as they breathe; yet it will be found by close observation that the song of your caged pet is imitative as well as natural. The quality of bird-notes comes from the education they receive. During the last century, a naturalist brought up some linnets, taken from the nest, in company of larks of sundry varieties, and found that every one of the linnets adopted completely the song of the master set over him, so that now these linnets—larks by naturalization—formed a company apart when placed among birds of their own species. Even the nightingale, whose native sound is so sweet, exhibits, under domestication, a considerable readiness to imitate other singing birds. The song of the bird is, therefore, determined by its education, and the same thing must be true as to nest-building. A bird brought up to a cage does not construct the nest peculiar to its species. In vain will you supply all the necessary materials; the bird will employ them without skill, and will oftentimes even renounce all purpose of building anything like a nest. Does not this well-known fact prove that, instead of being guided by instinct, the bird learns how to contruct his nest, just as a man learns how to build a house?

Painted Dogs.

A curious practice exists among certain tribes of the South American Indians of painting their dogs. The appearance of these animals, as might be assumed, is most peculiar, and a stranger, ignorant of the customs of the people, would be at a loss how to account for the peculiarity of their appearance. They are to be seen of all colors—yellow, blue, green and scarlet—while others are mottled with every variety of tint. A South American traveler, who recently accompanied a party of natives on a tapir hunt, says that it is the custom among many of the tribes of the South American Indians to dye, not only their own bodies, but the hairy coats of their dogs with brilliant colors, obtained from vegetable juices, such as buitie, yellow roca and indigo. The light gray, often white, hair of these animals, favors the staining process, and the effect produced pleases the eye of their savage masters, but to stranger the effect is fantastical.

"I could not," he says, "restrain my laughter, when I first scanned the curs in their fanciful coats; picture to yourself a pack of scarlet, orange and purple dogs."

ANTI-MONOPOLY.

Railroads—Banks—Old Political Parties, and the New.

Extracts from a Speech by Oliver P. Sabin, Editor of the Bloomington "Anti-Monopolist," Delivered at Pekin, Ill., on the 19th day of May, 1874.

CITIZENS OF TAZEWELL COUNTY: In this beautiful city of Pekin, nestled upon the eastern bank of the Illinois, favored by nature in the fertility of your soil throughout your county, rich in manufactures, living in this age of enlightenment, with its railroads, telegraph, and the multitude of inventions that should combine to make all prosperous and happy—I greet you as friends of humanity and co-workers in the cause of the people in their struggle for "equal rights and justice."

Is it not right, and altogether appropriate, that we should pause an hour or two in our struggles incident to a busy and enterprising life, to consider the questions of the hour which are now agitating every avenue of civilized society? The greatest of these questions is what is known in the comprehensive term of the "Farmer's Movement." By this term we do not wish to be understood as meaning simply those who cultivate the soil, but also that great body representing practical industry wherever it may be or can be found; that class of great deeds and great worth, the glory and bulwark of every country, whose prosperity and condition is the most accurate measure possible of the prosperity and condition of that country, whence must come the intelligence and industry, not only in our own land, but in all civilized governments, the noble, honest yeomanry, the bulwark now as it has ever been in all past ages of liberty and human rights—the common people who live by work

The constant encroachments of capital upon the domain of labor, the extortions of the bullion-loving, bondholding aristocrats, have perforce caused the uprising of the laboring masses of this nation. Although of so recent origin, it has spread with more rapidity than the cloud that was no larger than a man's hand. This movement, which was recently laughed at with scorn, derision and contempt, to-day promises to be a controlling power in our land. The freeman's voice raised in the cause of right can be heard from Maine to Texas, from the Atlantic to the golden shores of the Pacific, and from the great lakes of the North to the Gulf on the South. This land, which but a few years ago was steeped in fratricidal blood brought on by the land-pirates and human vultures who assumed to be our leaders, is now forming in a closer union than ever witnessed in the history of any civilized country. This uprising has come only when necessity has compelled it to come. When the bad combine to destroy our liberties the good must unite to preserve them. The bad long since combined to secure and increase their own selfish interests by creating legions of selfish monopolies. Chief among these monopolies are

THE RAILROADS.

They have by their so-called chartered privileges, vested rights, Dartmouth decisions; their moneyed influences with corrupt Legislatures; their well-known habits of consolidation with each other; their facilities for increasing small capital stock by a spurious and felonious system of so-called watering stock, and the ease by which they reconcile all these nefarious means to the accomplishment of their final purpose; by increasing their rates of freight to so high a point—practically excluded from the markets of the commercial world many of our great States of the West, so much so in fact, that the farmers of Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Kansas and other States have witnessed a blessing turned into a curse, and have been compelled to see the fruits of their toil, in the burning of their corn for fuel, smolder away into worthless ashes. They have stretched their long lines from the Far East to the Farther West, and at the same time have created rules and laws which have well-nigh destroyed the advantages which it was hoped would flow from their construction. We lay down in the long night that preceded their coming, fondly dreaming of the blessings that would be showered upon us by their advent; but woke up to find that they had riveted upon us chains that were more galling than any we had ever known—chains that wear none the less easily because fashioned out of the materials that we ourselves purchased, by magnificent tracts of the national domain, the depletion of the contents of our treasuries, and the creation of vast public debts, fastened upon the people and their posterity, as if forsooth these corporations with an eye single to their own interests, had determined to acquire vast tracts of country as fair as the sun in all his journeyings looks down upon. And second to create a race of slaves to work and till them for their especial benefit.

* * * * * *

CENTRALIZED CAPITAL.

Another monopoly, if indeed it be second to railroads in a financial sense, stands pre-eminently first in the destruction of the liberty of our people. It is that of the centralization of capital. Our present system of finance has apparently been created and certainly made to subserve the interest of a privileged class at the expense and to the detriment of the industrial classes of our people, upon whose wealth it is bottomed, and whose credit gives it the little of stability it possesses.

The intricacies of this system enable the railroad sharks, salary-grabbers, Wall street gamblers, Eastern capitalists and all such classes to perfect and carry out their plans, tricks, schemes and corners to elevate and depress the prices of the products of labor, the necessaries of life, and stocks and national securities at pleasure, and out of these manifold charges and combinations to reap a golden harvest at the expense of one common people, who have warmed these venomous serpents in their bosoms until they have turned upon us with their deadly fangs and poisonous virus to destroy and sting us to death. The national banking system, in short, enables these classes to coin false moneys out of that crucible called debt, and to compel us to use that money at rates of interest which would put to blush the veriest Shylock who ever loaned money to Christian men.

Do you use this money? Examine your pocketbooks and see what portion of their contents is made up national bank bills and what portion of greenbacks. The Government—that is the people—pays interest on the debt on which these national bank bills are based and issued, and you, the people, pay another interest on the bills to the banks that are based on this interest-bearing debt, thus paying at one and the same time a double interest. The Government pays about twenty-two million dollars per year, and the people pay whatever interest the conscience of these bankers allows them to ask, and the necessities of the borrower compel him to pay. No blister ever drew sharper than this illegal interest; it works all day and all night, in fair weather and in foul; its foot-prints make no sound, but it travels swiftly; it gnaws at your vitals with invisible teeth; it binds industry with a film as the fly is bound by the spider's web. Debts roll a man over and over, binding him hand and foot, and letting him hang upon the fatal mesh until this "spider of hell" devours him. There is but one thing on a farm that we know of like it, and that is the Canada thistle, which swarms new plants every time you break its roots; whose blossoms are prolific, and every flower the father of a million seeds; every leaf is an awl and a spear, and every plant like a platoon of bayonets, and a field of them like an armed host. The whole plant is a torment and a vegetable curse. So the borrower had better make his bed of Canada thistles than to attempt to live and prosper by paying their extortionate rates of usury.

Had we the time to analyze all the objections which lie against the present system, it would be easy to prove that, by the very operation of the law which lies at the bottom of the system, it does induce at seasons undue flow of money to New York and to the great centers. That these accumulations do encourage speculations, and speculations create panics. It would be easy to show that its very rigidity of volume, its non-elasticity, its insufficiency, make it the subject of control by heavy capitalists, and thereby places at the mercy of Wall street the profits on the legitimate industries of the country. That it presents competition and thereby insures a high rate of interest, which is death to the debtor and to the producing classes. That it brings, of necessity, the Federal Treasury into competition with Wall street in the sale of gold, and thus makes it not only a speculator in its own promises, but an absorber of the currency, already insufficient for the people. It changes, in a word, the Government into a gigantic banking establishment which, in violation of every principle of equity, and unmindful of its effects upon the morals of the people, demands payment in one currency, while it makes payment in another. It thus sets an example whose pernicious influence is fast de*bauching the people and changing the nation* into a nation of speculators and gamblers.

OLD PARTIES.

For a brief moment let us discuss the history of the late political parties. Political parties are organized and brought into existence to represent great ideas. So long as they represent those ideas truly, so long they live. When they represent them imperfectly desolation commences; and when they cease to represent them, they cease to live. The oldest of the two parties—the Democratic—was originally organized by that pure man, great statesman, lover and defender of liberty—THOMAS JEFFERSON. Like its founder, it was also pure, based upon the bed-rock of human rights, and in the language of the late lamented Douglas, a "Government by the people, of the people and for the people," pledged to a strict construction of the Constitution whenever that construction arose as against the Government and in favor of the people. In time it ceased to represent the great principles of its birth; its old leaders passed away, new ones took their places and with them came new principles, and new followers gathered around them a mob of scheming and unprincipled men, and that mob, which, without an atom of honest democracy in its purposes, dubbed itself the Democratic party. It was instituted to perpetuate the foundations of the slavery barbarism, through the assertion of a false and untenable theory of "State rights" from which the higher rights of the individual are excluded. From the very nature of its doctrine, it speedily became a kind of oligarchy government, supplemented on the framework of a popular representative government. Practicing persistently on the banditti maxim of William L. Marcy, "that the spoils belong to the victors," to get and divide the spoils among the political bandit-chiefs very soon became the sole object and mission of its existence. It was the slavery principle, according to which slaveholders waxed fat on the earnings of their human chattels, carried into the practice of a political party whose leaders and managers asserted a claim of right to aggrandize themselves upon the spoils of office extracted from the earnings of the people.

Thus John C. Calhoun's cohesive power of public plunder constituted the cementing bond of the combination of political oligarchs who distributed to themselves the earnings of "niggers" and the spoils of office in the pretentious name of "Democracy." Turning traitor to itself, it sought to destroy the life of the nation which it was originally organized to foster and protect.

Such in brief is an epitome of the rise, progress, and fall of the Democratic party.

That other party, the Republican, was formed for the purpose of extending the limits of liberty and circumscribing the territory of slavery. It was hailed as the bright harbinger of good-will toward the sons of men. It came to fight the battles of freedom, and it fought them bravely and successfully. Under its guidance our nation became an ocean-girt republic of freedom, within whose boundaries there was no room for slaves. At its call able statesmen came forth to announce and defend its principles. The names of its Lincolns, Chases, Sewards, Greeleys, Yates and Sumners are treasured in the hearts and memories of a grateful people. When the arguments of these men were hushed by the clash of arms, in the providence of the great God of the universe, military chieftains arose who led our armies on to a victorious peace.

During this wonderful age, and under the administration of this great party, the arts of peace were not forgotten. Master-minds gathered the iron rails of Pennsylvania, the laurel ties of Nevada and the golden spikes of California, and welded them into a continental thoroughfare for the sons of men, until, amid the rejoicings of forty millions of people, the lightnings carried the news, over the mountains and under the seas, of the accomplishment of this great work. It crowned the heavenward-reaching dome of our national capital with the fair goddess of American liberty.

Could we pause with this retrospective view, well content would we be to draw the curtain of history and let the Republican party live with its laurels clustering about its brow; but such cannot be. We have spoken of its rise to the zenith of political glory; we now come to note its disgraceful descent. Power and wealth begot corruption, and corruption in all parties is but the forerunner of bigotry, aristocracy, snobbery and dissolution. Men who were the masters of the art of war were made the keepers of the house of peace. Such a radical change in the rules of the nation necessarily brought with it a change in its customs, forms, and modes of procedure. With the advent of Grantism at Washington, there has been a perceptible and significant change in the simple usages that previously prevailed in public life, from the days of JEFFERSON, and which conformed to the genius of republican institutions; shoddyism has established itself in the highest places, and seeks to ape in a vulgar way the practices of foreign courts. Imitating the example of royalty, the President abandons the capital as soon as his loyal Congress adjourns, and establishes himself at Long Branch for the season, just as if the public business had no claim on his attention. The Cabinet and a crowd of underlings follow in the footsteps of their illustrious chief, so that Washington looks like a deserted village for four months in the year, and the departments are practically closed. In order to distinguish himself from the common herd, the President drives a flashy four-in-hand, with gilt harness, white reins, and liveried outriders to match.

Think, Americans, you who live in a republic that frowns upon pomp and show, think how disgusting is this picture we have drawn. It is true, neither have we told all.

The respectable messengers who have once served at the White House have been changed for flunkies after the English model of a low type. The coarse tastes and bad manners of the Executive Mansion are the fashions among the adventurers, jobbers, carpet-baggers, shoddyites and schemers who enjoy the President's intimacy and set up what they call society. Among this following there is a constant strife for ascendency for the first place after "His Excellency," as they all dub him on State occasions.

The conventional law which becomingly regulated the relations of official life for more than three-quarters of a century, did not suit the upstarts and pretenders, who, like the dregs in a violent fermentation, have found themselves suddenly thrown to the surface. So Cabinet officers, Senators, Representatives, courts and other branches of this so-called Republican party, have all been exercised about their etiquette, and as to who should have precedence at Boss Shepherd's dinners and balls, which the President ordered them to attend. Their thoughts have wandered from the interests of the country, but they have been mainly occupied with rank and rivalry, jealousies and back-biting, which had much to do with defeating Williams for Chief Justice, since according to the new social code that place would have given Madam a superiority which her "friends" of the Cabinet did not like to yield. Nor has their corruption been confined to the social walks of life, but it permeates every department of the Government. Under their boasted reforms of the civil service, stealing, bribery, nepotism and a general disregard of merit has become the rule, and an honest man, who is permitted to attend to the duties of his office, the exception.

At a gathering of the "leaders" of this organization of rottenness at Springfield in our own State, recently, it was said in a boasting tone by a shallow-pated person holding the seat of a State Senator, that the Republican party is the only political party that has ever exposed its own thieves. The remark was intended for eulogy. But why have its thieves—or a small number of them—been exposed? Simply because their scoundrelism had become so gross that it could not any longer be hid. The corruption within had literally eaten its way to the surface at a thousand points, and must come out.

The credit-mobilier plundering, congressional bribery, Jayne piracy, Sanborn blackmailing, District of Columbia plundering, the Indian swindling, the Freedman's Bureau swindling, the mail-contract swindling, the steamship subsidy swindling, the gigantic schemes of peculation, theft and plunder, so numerous that no man can memorize the list, have been exposed because concealment of villainies so colossal was no longer possible.

But what, we ask, has this party done with its exposed scoundrels? Let us see. It has honored the bribe-taker Bingham with a foreign mission. It has rewarded the rascal Casey—who, by the way, is brother-in-law to the President—with a custom-house reappointment. It has kept the liar and rogue Richardson at the head of the national treasury. It has honored the ballot-box corrupter Harlan with its confidence and approval. It has used the power of the standing army to protect the scoundrels, Durell, Kellogg & Co., in their usurpations in Louisiana. In short, it has dismissed its proceeding against every revenue-collecting thief ever taken in the act of stealing. It has whitewashed every office-holding scoundrel that it has not rewarded with an appointment to some higher place of trust and profit. And it has not punished one corrupt scoundrel who promised to help the party, but every decent official that refused to wink at villainy.

This is the record it has made, a record which language is inadequate to express in the fullness of its baseness.

Republicans will tell you that their party is not so corrupt as was the late Democratic party, and endeavor to screen their own villainous record in that way.

It is true that in the days of its life the Democratic party became the ultimate standard of the worst known political corruption. To express their highest conception of the politically-rotten, men said "as rotten as the Democratic party." There had been discovered no higher standard of comparison. Men thought that the country had found in that compact organization of men inspired by the pirates' motto, "To the victors belong the spoils," the ne plus ultra of political depravity, and that whatever else might happen there could not be any greater political depravity beyond. As usual men were mistaken.

For the corruption of the now dominant political party, the rottenness of the old Democratic party, even in its most corrupt days, furnishes no parallel. The corruption, fraud, theft, robbery, scoundrelism and depravity of every name that have characterized the two administrations of the Grant party, are without a parallel in the history of the United States; nay, are almost without a parallel in the history of the world. By comparison with this spectacle of organized monstrosity the old Democratic party, steeped and double dyed in political rottenness, was as an angel of light and righteousness to some hideous imp from the lowest pits of the eternally damned.

* * * * * *

Thus, at considerable length, we have sketched the wrongs that have been heaped upon us—all teaching us of the necessity of a thorough reformation.

No government that oppresses its citizens can long remain in prosperity, from the fac that the citizens are the government. It is to accomplish this reformation that the party of the people is called forth. You ask how can this be accomplished? We answer by organization—combining in a closer union for the purposes of working out this reformation. The present will be known in history as an era of organization. All classes of society and branches of business, all trades and professions, have associations for the material protection and assistance of those concerned.

By organization Alexander the Great overran the Medo-Persian Empire, demolished the walls of Tyre, overcame the arid sands of the great Sahara, and marched his victorious legions to the banks of the Ganges.

By organization Mahomet, the false prophet, gathered around him the robbers and bandits of the plains of Arabia, and out of these disjointed forces built up a power which the world could not withstand.

By organization Hannibal, the Carthaginian General, molded an army and navy with which for years he held complete sway of the seas and made the power of Rome to tremble to its very center.

By organization Napoleon Bonaparte made of France a first-class power, and the world stood aghast at the perfect degree of order and harmony which he evolved from the wild chaos which his predecessors had created, and dictated treaties to his opponents within their own capitals and upon his own terms.

By organization railroad kings have fixed their tariffs.

Capitalists in their secret sessions have ruled with despotic power the world of finance.

Through their chambers of commerce merchants have fixed their rates of profits, and every interest has its system of protection.

Until this wide-spread movement, the tillers of the soil, of all classes, were without ready means to protect their interests; possessed of vast wealth, yet they were at the mercy of the shrewder and more provident classes; of vast power, they yet knew not how to wield that power for their own benefit. But this large portion of our population is organized, and they are fast combining with all other industrial classes.

The question now is how best shall this be utilized—should this movement be political? We answer yes, and we use the term in its truest sense. It should occupy, possess and hold every office in this nation, from pathmaster to President.

It should represent the nation abroad, at the courts of St. James and Versailles.

Congress should be filled with its representative men.

Judges in full sympathy with its objects should occupy our supreme benches—men who in the noon-day light of the present age, will be able to see their way through the musty precedents of by-gone times, to a decision establishing the law to be, that corporations are the servants and not the masters of civilization.

Men, who, when musty decisions stand in the way, will brush them aside as cobwebs that have been spun in the judicial night, on which the sun of a better day is now dawning, when railroad money ceases to buy decisions from venal and avaricious judges, who have cursed this country for the last half-century.

It should have a system of politics that is pure—from its equation of forces, the factor—money should be eliminated.

If the money power shows itself in our councils, it should be stamped into nothingness and ground into the dust, beneath the feet of honest men. It should be made to know its place; its baneful presence should no longer pollute our high places.

This insidious money power has poisoned the sources of our national life; it has woven its meshes about our Government until flushed with its triumphs, it has become bold and arrogant. It is united, cunning and determined. It invades the council chambers of the nation, corrupts the trusted statesman, crushes merit, and makes honest poverty a shame.

Through unjust legislation and cruel exactions, it robs the people of the just reward of their toil and appropriates the earnings of millions.

It has made infamous the once proud name of our beloved land, and has made the name of American politics a synonym for corruption, knavery and vice. It presides in the halls of justice and makes traffic of the rights and liberties of the people.

* * * * * *

THE GENERAL OUTLOOK.

The great length of time already occupied in this somewhat desultory address, admonishes us that we must hasten to a conclusion. Fain would we speak longer of the many wrongs with which our country is now filled, and of the remedies by which, as we hopefully trust, they are in the near future to be fully eradicated; how the principles, philosophy, objects and aims of this great party are to be successfully forwarded.

The signs of the times are full of promise. In many States we have repulsed the forces of the monopolists, the shouts of victory have reverberated from the granite hills of New England, over the fertile prairies of the great West, and have awakened the echoes amid the Sierras of the Pacific coast. Nor need we go to other States for tidings of victory. In Illinois we have met the enemy and defeated him in his stronghold.

Our Convention is now called to nominate candidates for State officers for the coming fall campaign, who will certainly be elected.

And you, citizens of Tazewell county, have formed in the past, and will in the future, a portion of this victorious army.

The contest upon which we have entered demands unflagging energies, a long and never-tiring devotion to principle, and more than all else, calls for men who with nerves of steel and hearts of iron, unwavering principles, will stand by the right though the heavens fall.

In the language of Dr. Holland, that pure, brave and gifted son of New England, we conclude:

God give us men. A time like this demands
Strong minds, great hearts, true faith and ready hands;
Men whom the lust of office does not kill;
Men whom the spoils of office can not buy;
Men who possess opinions and a will;
Men who have honor, men who will not lie;
Men who can stand before a demagogue
And damn his treacherous flattery without winking;
Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog
In public duty and private thinking;
For while the rabble, with their thumb-worn creeds,
Their large professions and their little deeds,
Mingle in selfish strife—Lo! Freedom weeps;
Wrong rules the land and waiting justice sleeps.

"MONEY is very tight in these times," said a thief, who was trying to open a bank vault.

THERE is said to be no absolute cure for laziness, but a second wife has been known to hurry it a little.

THE man who got in the habit of rising with the occasion found it did not agree with him—nor with others.

A LADY reporter, sent to an agricultural fair, wrote of a lot of young pigs: "They look too sweet to live a minute."

A DETROIT paper, noticing the fact that a man lately dropped dead while combing his hair, says, "And yet there are people who will persist in the dangerous habit!"

A COUNTRY paper says that, in reply to a question from the lecture committee of the chief town of the district, as to the subject of a lecture to be given at the institution, the lecturer telegraphed, "A Taste of Naples and Rome." The operator made it read, "A Taste of Apples and Rum."

A YOUNG lady took her younger brother, a little boy of three or four years old, to church. The preacher was an earnest man, and spoke very loudly. During the sermon she saw the little fellow in tears, and asked him what was the matter with him. He sobbed out, "That man is hollering at me."

A MAN in Indiana has had lots of fun out of a valentine, in which he was depicted as "mother's pet." This set him in a rage; he got drunk, abused his mother, whipped his wife, because he thought she knew something of it, was discharged from his place in the mill, made a disturbance on the streets, was arrested, fined about $13 and sent to jail.

KATE STANTON asserts that the planets revolve around the sun by the influence of love, as a child revolves about his parent. When the writer was a boy, he used to revolve round his parent a good deal, and may have been incited thereto by love, but to an unprejudiced observer it looked powerfully like a trunk-strap.

AN Aberdeen minister, catechising his young parishioners before the congregation, put the usual question to a stout girl, whose father kept a public house—"What is your name?" No reply. The question having been repeated, the girl replied: "Nane o' your fun, Mr. Minister, ye ken my name well enough. D'ye no say, when ye come to our house on a night, 'Bet, bring me some ale?'"

A SIMPLE Highland girl called upon an old master with whom she had formerly served. Being kindly invited by him to share in the family dinner, the usual ceremony of asking a blessing having been gone through, the girl, anxious to compliment her ancient host, exclaimed: "Ah, master, ye maun hae a grand memory, for that's the grace ye had when I was wi' ye seven years ago."

Can Wheat be Raised in Nebraska?

This question is frequently asked, and Mr. E. W. Grinnell, residing two and a half miles from Harvard, Clay county, Neb., on the line of the Burlington and Missouri River railroad, answers the question with the following statement of his success with that crop in 1873. He homesteaded 160 acres of land, and cultivated 100 acres with wheat. His figures are as follows:

Breaking one hundred acres, at $2 per acre	$200.00
Second breaking one hundred acres, at $1.50 per acre	150.00
Sowing	30.00
Seed-wheat, 150 bushels	150.00
Cutting and stacking, $2.50 per acre	250.00
Threshing, 3½ cents per bushel	99.00
Hauling 2½ miles to market, 75 cents per load	41.25
Total	$920.25
The yield from this one hundred acres was 2,900 bushels wheat, which he sold at 92 cents per bushel	$2,024.00
Profit	$1,103.75

Placing the value of this land at eight dollars per acre, the price at which the Burlington and Missouri River railroad holds its lands adjoining this farm, it will be seen that the profit of this single crop of wheat has over paid the cost of the land on which it was raised by three hundred dollars, and falls short of paying for the whole quarter section, by less than one hundred dollars.

HETTY MARVIN.

The Girl That Wouldn't Tell A Lie.

When the British and Tories attacked New London, Conn., in 17—, and set a price on the head of Gov. Griswold, the latter fled to the town of L— where his cousin, Mrs. Marvin, hid him for some days, in a secluded farm-house; But at length the subtle foe discovered his retreat; and one sunny afternoon in May he was routed from his hiding place, by the tidings that a band of horsemen were approaching to capture him.

His only chance of escape was to reach the mouth of a little creek, which emptied itself into the Connecticut River, just above the entrance of the latter into Long Island sound. There he had a boat stationed, with two faithful attendants hidden beneath the high banks of the creek. The distance from the farm house to the boat was two miles by the usual traveled road, But a little sheep-path across the Farmer's orchards would bring him to the road only a mile from the boat; and save a quarters length of his fearful run for life.

Just where the narrow path from the orchard opened into the road, Hetty Marvin sat with her dog Towser, tending the bleaching of the household linen. The long web of forty yards, or more, which was diligently spun and woven during the long winter months, was whitened in May, and thus made ready for use. The business of bleaching was well economized, being usually done by the younger daughters of the family, who were not old enough to spin, or strong enough for the heavier work of the kitchen and dairy.

The roll of linen was taken by the farmer or his stout "help" to a grassy plat, beside a spring or meadow brook. There it was thoroughly wetted and spread upon the green turf, to take the best of the heat of the sun by day and the dew at night. The little maiden who tended it would sit near it.

Thus sat Hetty Marvin, the young daughter of Gov. Griswold's cousin, when her hunted friend sprang past her, into the road, to escape from his pursuers Hetty was a timid child of about twelve years; yet thoughtful and wise beyond many of her elders. She was frightened by the headlong haste with which the Governor rushed across the meadow But she quietly comprehended the scene, and instantly quieted her faithful Towser, who tho', a friend of the family guest, thought it becoming to bark loudly at his hurried steps.

Her wise forethought arrested the Governor's notice, and suggested a scheme to delude his pursuers. "Hetty," he said, earnestly, "I am flying for my life; and unless I can reach my boat before I am overtaken, I am a lost man. You see the road forks here. But you must tell those who are chasing me, that I have gone up the road to catch the mail wagon, which will soon be along you know. Then they will turn off the other way."

"Oh, Cousin!" said the little girl. in an agony of distress, "I cannot tell a lie; indeed I cannot; why did you tell me which way you were going!"

"Hetty, dear child, surely you wo'd not betray me to my death! Hark! they are coming—I hear the click of their horses' feet.. Oh, Hetty, tell them I have gone up the road instead of down; and heaven will bless you."

"Heaven never blesses those who speak falsely, cousin! But I will not tell them which way you go, even if they kill me; so run as quickly as possible."

"It's of no use; unless I can deceive them I am a dead man."

"Cousin, cousin, hide under my web of cloth; they'd never think of looking hear for you. Come, get down as swift as you can; and I'll cover you, and stand sprinkling my linen."

"It's my only chance, child; I'll get down, as you say." And suiting the action to the word, the Governor was soon hidden under the ample folds of the cloth.

Angry that their expected prey had escaped from the house where they hoped to secure him, the six mounted Tories, headed by a British officer, dashed along the road in swift pursuit. At sight of the little girl in the meadow, the leader of the party paused.

"Child," he said sternly, "have you seen a man running away hereabouts?"

"Yes sir," replied Hetty, trembling and flushing.

"Which way did he go?"

"I promised not to tell, sir."

"But you must, or take the consequences."

"I said I wouldn't tell if you killed me," sobbed the frightened girl.

"I'll have it out of her," exclaimed the furious officer, with an oath.

"Let me speak to her." said his Tory guide: "I know the child, I believe Isn't your name Hetty Marvin?" he asked pleasantly.

"Yes, sir."

"And this man that ran by you a few minutes ago, was your mother's cousin, wasn't he?"

"Yes, sir, he was."

"Well, we are friends of his—what did he say to you when he came along?"

"He—he told me that he was flying for his life."

"Just so, Hetty; that was very true. I hope he won't have to fly far. Where was he going to try to hide? you see I could help him if I knew his plans."

Now Hetty was not a whit deceived by this smooth speech. But she was willing to tell as much of the truth as would consist with his safety, and she wisely judged that her frankness would serve her kinsman better than her silence. So she answered her questioner candidly. "My cousin said that he was going down this way to the river, where he had a boat and he wanted me to tell the men that were chasing him, that he had gone the other way to catch the mail wagon."

"Why didn't you do as he bid you then, when I ask you where he had gone?" thundered the officer fiercely.

"I could not tell a lie sir," was the tearful answer.

"Hetty," again began the smooth-tongued Tory, "you are a nice child. Everybody knows you are a girl of truth. What did your cousin say, when you told him you couldn't tell a falsehood?"

"His last words were 'It's my only chance; and I'll get down as you say.'" And overcome by fright and the sense of her kinsmans danger, should they rightly interpret the language which she had reported, she sobbed aloud and hid her face from sight.

Her tormentors did not stay longer to soothe or question her. They had got as they supposed, the information which they wanted; and pushed rapidly on down the river.

When the Governor rejoined his father in a secure home, he named the infant daughter which had been born in his absence, "Hetty Marvin," that he might be daily reminded of the little cousin whose truth and shrewdness had saved his life.

The Village Paper

"The little village paper," is the best paper in the world. No other paper contains the marriages and deaths, to say nothing of divorces and birth; no other relates the accidents happening before the doors of the villagers; no other gives the time of the next ball, picnic or political meeting; no others discusses the affairs of the town and county, the arrival of new goods on the merchants counters, or of a new hat on the editor's desk Without a paper the town that has ever enjoyed a well managed one, feels indeed lost. The well-edited village paper, is the most welcome visitor at the door of the same proportion. the best medium for advertising.—Ex.

A correspondent in the Journal of Pharmacy says: Having noticed mice in our seed barrels, I bethought me how I might trap the little intruders. I thought of saturating a piece of cotton with chloroform and throwing it in and closing the lid. On raising it again in a few minutes, I would find that life had almost or quite departed. Having, on one occasion, left the piece of cotton in the barrel, on again returning I found three mice with their heads in close contact with it, and dead. In the evening I saturated another piece and placed it in the barrel, and, on opening it the next morning, to my surprise I found nine dead mice.

What the Indiana Democracy Should Do.

The Democrats of Indiana have justified our confidence in them expressed only a few days ago. The charter elections show everywhere save in the solitary city of Madison, marked Democratic gains and Republican loss and apathy. Mr. Morton's home, Indianapolis, declares against his party for the first time in eighteen years; in Mr. Colfax's abiding City, South Bend, the Republicans elect the City Marshal of nine candidates they appointed for the slaughter. The Republicans now concede a popular Democratic majority in the State next October, and that means a Legislature Democratic in both branches, a Democrat in the United States Senate, in the place of Mr. Spratt, nine or ten Democratic Representatives of thirteen in the Forty-fourth Congress instead of four, and fifteen votes in the next Electoral College against the Radical nominee for President. All this the Democrats of Indiana, under the management of Judge McDonald, than whom Mr. Alvord could not have a worthier successor, may be depended upon to accomplish. The Democrats of Indiana have no opposition to fear. The Republican party is hopelessly disintegrating; and the "new party," despite its forged calls, has failed to hoodwink the patrons or the farmers. With an assured success waiting upon their efforts, they have no possible excuse for trimming, and can at their leasure select the staunchest candidates and place them on the soundest platform. Indiana and Kansas are the only two States in the West where inflation is popular, and it is necessary that the Democrats of Indiana give forth no doubtful sound upon the issue. Already such representative Western Republican papers as the St. Louis Globe and Chicago Journal are demanding the slaughter of all Republicans who do not follow the President in financial matters, and at the same time are urging upon the Democrats the popularity and claims of Mr. Pendleton as a Presidential candidate for 1876. All this means that the Republicans of the West are endeavoring in the phrase of Bacon, "to turn the cat in the pan," to place the Democracy in 1876 on the platform of repudiation, and repeat their triumph of 1868. The Republicans know that Messrs. Logan and Morton dare not rebel, and if they can place upon the Democrats the odium of supporting inflation—or repudiation, its synonym—they have at last hope of perpetuating their reign over the country. Long before 1876 the most honest popular blindness which now confounds lack of currency will have been enlightened and the Democrat who, to gain to-day one vote that in the larger field to-morrow will lose his party ten, gives aid and comfort to the enemy.—New York World.

I have heard of people who were too calm and complacent. Of such a character I think was the conductor, who, when he ran over a man, said:

"I never like to do it, because it musses up the track so."

And speaking of saws, and following up the train of thought, I may mention a young man from the country who went into a hardware store, and rapping a great buzz saw with his knuckles, he remarked:

"I had an old dad ripped to pieces with one of them things last week."

I think that man exhibited too little emotion for the occasion.

As cool a person under the circumstance, as I ever heard of, was a young nobleman who, in a fearful railway accident, missed his valet. One of the guards came up to him and said:

My lord, we have found your servant but he's cut in two.

"Aw, is he?" said the young man with a Dundreary drawl, but still with anxiety depicted on his countenance. Will you be good enough to see in which half he has got the key to my carpet-bag?"

To a sensitive mind his anxiety seems to have been misplaced.

An Eye to Business.

Recently a jehu in Philadelphia, learning that a delegation of quakers was expected on the midnight train at West Philadelphia depot, made good use of his native ingenuity by assuming the role of one of the order in wearing a broad brim hat, hoping thereby to secure their patronage when the delegation made its appearance. Jehu, with an eye to business, and an elongated countenance gotten up expressly for the occasion, accosted them when the following colloquy between the jehu and one of the elders astonished the by-standers: Jehu—"Does thou want to ride?" Quaker—"Might we ride with thee?" Jehu—"Thy mountest—jump in." He secured a full load.

ODE TO WASHINGTON.

[The following ode, for Washington's birthday, is a literary curiosity. It is not to be found in any of the different editions of Burns' poems, but is copied from the original manuscript now possessed by a gentleman in Cincinnati:]

I.

No Spartan tube, no attic shell,
No lyre Æolian I awake;
'Tis Liberty's bold note I swell,
My harp, Columbia, let me take.
See gathering thousands, while I sing,
A broken chain, exulting, bring
And dash it in a tyrant's face!
And dare him to his very beard,
And tell him he no more is feared,
No more the Despot of Columbia's race.
tyrant's proudest insults braved,
They shout, a People freed! They hail an Empire saved.

II.

Where is man's godlike form?
Where is that brow erect and bold,
That eye that can, unmoved, behold
The wildest rage, the loudest storm,
That e'er created fury dared to raise?
Avaunt! then, caitiff, servile, base,
That tremblest at a Tyrant's nod,
Yet, crouching under th' iron rod,
Canst laud the arm that struck the insulting blow.
Art thou of man's imperial line?
Dost boast that countenance divine?
Each skulking feature answers, No!
But come, ye sons of Liberty,
Columbia's offspring, brave as free,
In Danger's hour still flaming in the van,
Ye know and dare maintain the Royalty of man.

III.

Alfred, on thy starry throne,
Surrounded by the tuneful choir,
The bards that erst have struck the patriot lyre,
And roused the free-born Briton's soul of fire,
No more thy England own.
Dare injured nations from the great design
To make detested tyrants bleed?
Thy England execrates the glorious deed
Beneath her hostile banners waving,
Every pang of honor braving,
England in thunder calls—"The Tyrant's cause is mine!"
That hour accurst, how did the fiends rejoice,
And hell thro' all her confines arise the exulting voice—
That hour which saw the generous English name
Linkt with such damned deeds of everlasting shame!

IV.

Thee, Caledonia, thy wild heaths among,
Famed for the martial deed, the heaven-taught song,
To thee I turn with swimming eyes,
Where is that soul of Freedom fled?
Immingled with mighty Dead!
Beneath that hallowed turf where Wallace lies.
Hear it not, Wallace, in thy bed of Death!
Ye babbling winds in silence sweep;
Disturb not ye the hero's sleep,
Nor give the coward secret breath.
Is this the ancient Caledonian form,
Firm as her rock, resistless as her storm?
Show me that eye which shot immortal hate,
Blasting the Despot's proudest bearing;
Show me that arm, which, nerved with thundering fate,
Braved Usurpation's boldest daring!
Dark quenched as yonder sinking star,
No more that glance lightens afar;
That palsied arm no more whirls on the waste of war.

FAITH MURRAY'S VOW.

Not an ungenerous girl was Faith Murray by any manner of means, and her honest blue eyes were very pleasant and kindly to look in. A part, nevertheless, of Faith's inheritance from her high-headed Scotch ancestry had been a somewhat hasty and jealous disposition, and a goodly share of their own unyielding obstinacy. As her mother was apt to remark at times: "Faith is a dear girl, but she needs management, and it isn't everybody that knows her."

Not "everybody," indeed; and assuredly not such a bluff, frank, straightforwardly up-and-down fellow as Curtis Howland.

Tall, broad-shouldered, curly-headed, dark-eyed was Curt, and his white teeth were perpetually gleaming, through his heavy mustache, in a smile that betokened good-will to every soul he met, male or female.

That was very much the way in which he came so utterly to grief in his "management" of Faith Murray. He was as true as steel, and she knew it; but his universal popularity had shaped itself, strangely enough, into one of her pet grievances, and this she had nursed into such strength that its evil energy burst forth, at last, just at the wrong time and place.

Openly, angrily, and in the hearing of others even, had Faith told Curt, on their return from the last picnic and boating party of the season, that she "would never put her foot into a boat of his again."

Curt had replied, with a laugh, "Then I'll always have to borrow one for you of somebody else;" but Faith learned afterward that, from that day forth, the square-nosed but light-built and almost handsome skiff, which had carried so merry a party to the picnic, had never, since that day, been loosed from its chain at the head of the little cove where the Howland farm came down to the river.

When winter approached, the boat had been taken out, of course, and carefully carted to its customary shed near the great barns, but Faith felt very sure that no other female foot since her own had been permitted to step within it.

As week had followed week, and month after month went by, Curt Howland's broad and merry face had seemed to grow a trifle graver and more thoughtful; his thoughts, however serious they may have been, had taught him little additional wisdom. If they had, he would have known better than to say what he did to Faith when he made his first out-and-out effort at reconciliation.

He had refused all along to be on any other than "speaking terms," and had "left Faith to do her own quarreling" in a way that was exceedingly impolitic and exasperating.

She had fairly longed to see him show some signs of temper or sentiment, and she had derived no small degree of satisfaction from the manner in which he had treated his boat. She had fairly warmed toward him, one day, when she learned of his borrowing a skiff to go duck-hunting, and yet she had muttered:

"He said he would borrow a boat to to take me out in, but I'll teach him a lesson yet!"

Perhaps Curt thought he had learned all the lesson that was necessary, but, at all events, one fine December day, he decided to call for Faith Murray and ask her to go with him on the grand sleighing-party to the "quilting-bee" across the river. There would be such a magnificent drive on the ice, and such a splendid opportunity to make up, and Curt had laid the matter very close, indeed, to his heart and hopes.

And yet, even when he went after her, he blundered, just like himself, from the very beginning. Instead of dashing up in his gay little cutter, with "just room for two," the sleigh he drove was the biggest of all the half-dozen or so that were hitched in front of Squire Murray's ample door-way, and Faith had said to herself, as she looked at it from the window:

"Looks as if he was going to carry all the girls in the neighborhood!" and her blue eyes had darkened, and her fair cheeks had flushed with fresh vexation. She was, every bit, ready to take fire, therefore, a few minutes later, when her too open-hearted admirer asked:

"You'll step into my sleigh, won't you, Faith, even if you won't put your foot in my boat?"

And she answered sharply:

"No, indeed, I don't care to ride in an omnibus. You will, doubtless, have plenty of company without me."

If Curt Howland had seemed to make light of his rebuff at the summer picnic, it was very different now, and there was something in the pained, hurt, disappointed expression of his manly and really handsome face that would have carried the day in his favor under any other circumstances. Every girl in the room was on his side in a moment—but Faith's rosy cheeks burned only the hotter for her consciousness of that fact—and the only person present who felt any real satisfaction was Sile Herring, the village lawyer, who was now sure of his good fortune to officiate as Faith Murray's escort to and from the quilting.

As for Curt himself, not a word said he, but turned steadily and dignifiedly toward the door, and in another minute the quick, sharp jingle of bells told Faith that his sleigh was, like his boat, doomed to go empty of lady-passengers until her own feet came back to it.

Up to that moment Curt's mind had been occupied only with joyous anticipations of reconciliation with Faith, and of the fun he would have on the sleigh-ride, going and coming, as well as the quilting. Now, however, as his fleet team drew him swiftly along the river-road on his lonely way homeward, his eyes wandered up and down the river, predisposed to discover anything that might appear to suggest an interference with the contemplated merry-making.

It is very strange how differently the world will look to a man in one frame of mind and another! That morning the sun had been cheery, the sleighing had been extraordinarily good, and Curt's merry eyes had discovered no flaws in the prospect; but now, as if his wits were sharpened by Faith Murray's rough reply, he began to discern that the snow was remarkably soft and "soggy;" and that, although the first "freeze" of the winter had been a severe one, and the ice had formed thick and strong, there had now, for several days, been altogether too much sunshine; and there was no such thing as telling what the effect of it might be.

Up and down the white expanse he gazed, and here and there he saw light cutters and even heavily-laden wood-sleighs crossing and recrossing, and the former now and then putting an extra burst of speed over the smooth and glancing surface. Neither to the right hand nor to the left did he turn, however, and by the time Faith Murray and her friends were on their way to the quilting, Curt Howland's team was safe in the stable, while his big sleigh stood empty by the back-door of the house, with all its buffalo-robes, blankets, clumsiness and disgrace, still clinging to its unoccupied spaces.

As for Faith herself, she had hardly ever seemed in such exuberant spirits as she displayed that evening, and Mr. Silas Herring assumed for himself a species of personal triumph, as he compared his own position and occupation with what he could imagine of Curt Howland's brooding at home over his defeat. The quilting was thronged with young people and old, from far and near, but good, old-fashioned hours were kept, nevertheless, and all the more so, probably, because of the anticipated pleasures of the sleigh-rides afterward.

If Faith Murray had any remorseful promptings concerning her conduct, she certainly gave no external token thereof, and led the fun as if she had never heard of such a person as Curtis Howland. Perhaps a keen observer, like her own mother, if only that good lady had been present, might have inclined to the idea that Faith was "overdoing" something, but Silas Herring was not a keen observer, and the rest of the merry company neither thought nor cared what might be the source of her high spirits. When at last the "quilting-bee" broke up, those whose homeward-way did not permit them to drive in the direction of the river, were half disposed to envy those whose better fortune was to lead them across its broad, smooth bosom. They little dreamed how much to be preferred were the rougher but more safe and solid roads that took them even among rugged hills and heavily-drifted valleys.

Somehow or other, instead of going to bed at his usual hour, Curt Howland had ligered and lounged in front of his glowing, log-heaped fireplace, long after every other soul in the house had gone to bed. He had pretended at first to occupy himself with a book, but by-and-by the volume dropped on the floor. Then for awhile Curt seemed to be absorbed in watching the vivid changes wrought by the fire as the seasoned-oak and hickory slowly yielded; and then, as the fore-stick snapped in two, and plunged among the coals with a strange, crackling sound, he suddenly sprang to his feet, threw on his hat and overcoat, and strode out into the open air in front of the house. It was a clear, beautiful night, just the sort for a sleigh-ride, and not so cold but that there was a continual drip, drip, at the eaves of the house. The tinkle of the falling drops, however, with now and then the crash of a loosened icicle, fell on his ears with a painful jar. Could it be possible that such a man had nerves? But now, swiftly down the road there came a sound of bells, and the vision of a sleigh was halted for a moment by the gate.

"Howland!" shouted a deep, hoarse voice. "Ah, you are up, are you? Well, there's a big rise in the river, and it's a comin' this way fast. I've been just a racin' down the road to warn folks not to try the ice, but I reckon I've come as far as I need. Can you give me a sleep and a breakfast?"

"Of course I can," promptly replied Curt, "and you've done a right-good neighborly thing. It's Jake Robinson, isn't it?"

"That's my name," heartily responded the stranger, "and I've only tried to do as I'd be done by."

"Well, then," said Curt, "you go into the house and go to bed. I'll hitch up my team and see if I can make out to keep the sleighing-party from mischief. There must be time enough for that, yet, seeing the quilting comes first—"

"I'll stable my horses," replied the philanthropic Jake, "but don't go into no bed, so long's there's anybody likely to be in danger. Drag out your sleigh. Is that it? Well, there's room into it for more'n two, there is."

Curt Howland's movements were always a good deal more rapid and decisive than they seemed, and it was marvelous how quickly he and Jake were whirling down toward the customary crossing. In one thing, however, Curt had been wofully mistaken, and that was in the probable hour for the quilting to break up. Even while he was putting the harness on his good team, there were terrible perils gathering around the gay sleigh-riders. Not only had the "bee" dispersed, but already had a dozen different sets of bells rang fast and far on the frozen river, and already the first symptoms of the coming "rise" were beginning to show themselves in the ominous groaning of the ice as the tide beneath it strained and lifted at its frosty fetters. Beyond a doubt they would be broken erelong.

"Hark!" exclaimed Curt, as he drove out from the shore. "Did you hear that? We shall hardly have time to get across, I'm afraid."

"Then they won't need no warnin'," coolly remarked Jake.

"Hark!" again cried Curt Howland, but hoarsely this time, and with something like pain in the intensity of his utterance. "I did hear it! There's a team coming down the river at a run!" Jake Robinson himself heard it now, and exclaimed:

"It does sound mighty like a runaway, I declare. Just hark to them bells!"

Curt's breath would have come even faster and his heart would have jumped more fiercely if he had known the whole truth. The horses of the sleighing-party had recognized the signs of approaching danger much more promptly than had their masters, nor had it been at all difficult, in most cases, for their skillful drivers to head the frightened but willing brutes toward safety and the shore. The single exception had been in the young and stylish but ill-broken span over which Sile Herring held the reins, for the gay young lawyer was not only not a "skillful driver," but he had failed to understand the situation at first, and had lashed his poor colts mercilessly for their trembling refusal to go forward. Even when he consented to wheel them, he had not been able to guide them landward, for a great heave and groan of the ice around him had just then nearly scared the senses out of both him and his quadrupeds. In a moment more the fright of the latter was a wild "runaway" right down the river, and certainly had one good result, for it bore the sleigh and its occupants swiftly away from what was fast becoming an angry tumult of cracking, tossing, grinding fragments. All this Curt Howland did not know, but, nevertheless, he drove straight forward instantly, with a dim idea of giving help to somebody. Well for him that he did so, for, in less than half a minute, he found himself spinning along at almost racing speed behind a light sleigh, in which there shortly arose a female form, which he knew only too well, while a clear, firm voice exclaimed:

"O, Curt, the ice is breaking! Drive ashore right away!"

And he had shouted in reply:

"Head 'em for the island, Sile; you can bring 'em in there, I'll follow right on. Don't be scared—Faith, I won't leave you."

And then another form had risen in the sleigh, and Faith Murray herself caught the falling reins as Sile Herring dropped them and sprang out upon the ice. It was a rash and foolish thing to do, and Curt reined in just long enough to say—

"That's it, Jake; jump out and drag him ashore while I go on after the runaways."

Jake obeyed heroically, and he found that Sile Herring did indeed require "dragging" to get him ashore, after that wild spring and thump upon the ice.

Faith was alone in her sleigh now, and but little sorry for that, to tell the truth, or even that she had the reins in her own hands, for she knew how to manage them far better that the panic-stricken youth who had deserted her, while the colts themselves were getting the first frenzy of their fright somewhat raced out of them. The brave girl knew very well what Curt meant by "the island;" a low-lying bit of duck-marsh and drift-wood hardly above the water's edge, not a great way farther down-stream, but in the very middle of the river. She thought it a strange stopping-place, at first, until she recalled how bluff and steep were the banks on either side of the river for miles below the accustomed "crossing."

Straight for the island, then, and Curt Howland's sleigh was close behind her; but, even as her wild young team sprang up the low acclivity, there came to Faith's ears a sharp, quick, snapping sound; the reins were jerked from her hands, and she found herself suddenly sitting still in her light cutter, while the colts went madly on, with the pole and its attachments banging at their heels. No uncommon thing for "irons" to snap, under such circumstances; and, if Faith was dismayed for a moment, Curt Howland felt a good deal more inclined to a hearty thanks-giving.

"Jump in, Faith, jump in!" he shouted cheerily, as drove alongside the cutter. "Don't you see you'll be my only passenger?"

Even in that moment of awful peril, however, Faith's obstinacy yielded slowly, and she was replying, half argumentatively:

"But, Curt, how will you ever get ashore? Don't you see that the ice is breaking? Won't we be safer on the island?"—when she found herself caught up in strong arms and lifted, with or without her will, to a snug place among the blankets and buffalo-robes at the bottom of the big sleigh.

"The river is rising. There is a great flood coming down!" exclaimed Curt. "In half an hour the island will be under water, and everything on it swept away. I'd never have known if Jake Robinson hadn't warned me. I hitched up and came out as soon as I got the news. Thank God!"

Faith Murray felt a glow and a melting at her heart as she listened, but she made no reply. The situation certainly seemed hardly to favor much conversation, for Curt was driving fiercely up the river again, and everywhere the signs of the approaching "break-up" were growing more and more fearful and threatening.

"Why don't you drive down?" she asked.

"The rapids are only half frozen," replied Curt, "and we should surely be lost if we got into them. Besides, the water is shallower up here, and the horses will find their footing sooner after we break in."

"After we break in!" repeated Faith, to herself. "Why, the sleigh will go right to the bottom. He is terribly cool about it!"

It was a cool subject, perhaps, and Faith felt the icy shudders creep over her, in spite of her courage, as she noted how far they yet were from any possible landing-place.

And now the booming, moaning sound that Faith had heard once before that evening, began to fill their ears, and the sleigh slid hither on the undulating surface, and Curt lashed his faithful, powerful span to their utmost exertion. Every minute seemed an hour; but now, at last, Curt exclaimed, exultingly:

"Hurrah, Faith! We are beyond the deep channel, I think. Back there the current is swift, and the ice will break and pile. It's breaking now! See it!—see the great cakes go over and over?"

"But, Curt," responded the almost shivering beauty, "don't you see that the ice is parting from the shore ahead of us, just because it piles up out yonder? I can tell by the moonlight on the water. O Curt, dear, it is dreadful to be drowned, but it's even worse to think that I've brought you out here, too. Can't you swim ashore? O Curt, I've been so very bad to you!"

"You wait a moment!" shouted the single-minded young athlete, as he gave his team the lash again. "If we can only get a little nearer the edge of the ice. Ha! there it comes! Down in the bottom of the boat, Faith, I must use use my oars? now—quick—hurrah!"

Faith Murray had hid her face in the furs that almost covered her as she stooped, but she heard a wild, fierce, frightened neigh; a great splashing plunge, as the horses went into the water; the cracking of ice, mingled with the roaring sound of the flood; and then, instead of the arctic bath for which she had prepared herself, she was conscious of an easy, rocking, floating motion, and the music of rowlocks, as the oars were swung strongly back and forth by the sinewy arms of Curt Howland.

Then, at last, her astonishment got the better of her fear and she looked timidly out from her hiding-place; but the color came fast into her cheeks again as he did so.

"The boat, Curt?" she said.

"Yes, the old boat herself," he replied. "I put it on instead of the sleigh-box, to come after you with, just for the fun of it, and covered it all over with robes and blankets. I only expected a good laugh, but now it has saved both our lives. You didn't mean to put your foot in my sleigh and the boat at the same time, did you, Faith?"

"O Curt, forgive me!" was all the answere that came just then, and Faith felt specially relieved at the remark which instantly followed.

"There are the horses—safe on their feet in the shallow and making for the shore. We'll be there, too, in five minutes. Just look at the lanterns along shore! There must be twenty men!"

Down went Faith Murray's head among the furs again, but in spite of the roaring water and the rattle of the rowlocks, she could plainly hear the exultant, happy, almost cooing tones of a deep, musical voice, that repeated her name over, and over, and over, with other words that seemed to be fitted wonderfully well both to name and voice.

"The boat and the sleigh, both!"

How strangely her rash and cruel words had come to naught, and what a man among men was Curtis Howland!

When at last the square prow of the skiff grated on the ice and gravel at the margin, and the strong arms once more caught her up and bore her onward, Faith Murray's blushing face was ready to nestle close to Curt's shoulder, and she whispered:

"No other boat but yours, if you'll forgive me—no, not so long as I live!"

Our Daily Bread.

A farinaceous diet may be well enough adapted to long-sustained plodding in fields, the monotonous life of a country shop-keeper, or, in fact, any sedentary life, but to the busy bee of the great metropolitan hive, plenty of animal food, as well as vegetables, is absolutely essential. In the one case the toil, if long and severe, is equally distributed and wholly muscular; in the other it may be all this one day, while the next day may demand the instantaneous promptitude of thought and action so characteristic of the well-trained sailor or soldier. The graceful herbivorous springbok of the African wastes can, in a long chase, easily outrun the fleetest carnivori, but the hunting cheetah, whose food is blood and quivering flesh, must overtake the deer during the first sudden rush, or its prey escapes. While the purely vegetable diet of the springbok enables it to put forth long and well-sustained exertion, the animal food of the leopard fits it for concentrated and sudden effort. The moral deducible from these illustrations is obvious: Feed the people according to the exertion demanded—the agricultural laborer and unintellectual country squire with bread and vegetalbes; the sailor chiefly with animal nutriment; and the brain-worker of the city with a copious supply of both.

Through all the ages of study and investigation which have marked the path of scientific discovery, one especially alluring object has tempted the inquiries and speculations of philosophers. It is what the wizards and witches of olden time, the jugglers of India, soothsayers of Arabia, Magi of Egypt, necromancers of Turkey and the Orient, and alchemists of civilized Europe have sought, but sought in vain—a vegetable non-poisonous Elixir, which, by cleansing the blood, removing from the system all impurities, strengthening the nerves, the muscles, and the brain, and vitalizing every fiber of the system should bid defiance to the corroding hand of disease.

Dr. Walker, of California, discovered an herb, the properties of which, if they do not entirely fulfill all the conditions above mentioned, have at least proved themselves efficacious in all of them; this herb Dr. Walker has made an ingredient in his famous Vinegar Bitters, which can be obtained of any wholesale Druggist throughout the country. 44.

Means What He Says.

Though "confirmations strong as proofs of Holy Writ," and as numerous as the sands on the sea-shore, were produced to prove that the proprietor of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is in earnest, and means what he says, when he offers $500 reward for any case of Catarrh which he cannot cure, yet there would be some skeptics and fogies who would continue to shout "Bumbug!" "Humbug!" "It cannot be, because Dr. Homespun says Catarrh cannot be cured." Now, this Dr. Homespun is the identical, good-natured old fellow who honestly believes and persists in declaring that this earth is not round or spherical, but as flat as a "slap-jack," and does not turn over, otherwise the water would all be spilled out of Deacon Bascom's mill-pond. But astronomical science has positively demonstrated and proven that Dr. Homespun is wrong in supposing the earth to be flat and stationary, and medical science is daily proving the fact that he is no less mistaken and behind the times in regard to the curability of Catarrh. In short, it has been positively proven that this world moves, and that medical science is progressive—the opinion of Dr. Homespun to the contrary notwithstanding. That Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy will cure Catarrh, thousands who have used it attest.

Then buy it, and use it, in doubt do not stand,
You will find it in drug stores all over the land.

SUCH AS
Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma and Consumption.

The few compositions which have won the confidence of mankind and become household words among not only one but many nations, must have extraordinary virtues. Perhaps no one ever secured so wide a reputation, or maintained it so long, as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It has been known to the public about forty years, by a long continued series of marvelous cures, that have won for it a confidence in its virtues, never equaled by any other medicine. It still makes the most effectual cures of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, that can be made by medical skill. Indeed the Cherry Pectoral has really robbed these dangerous diseases of their terrors, to a great extent, and given a feeling of immunity from their fatal effects, that is well founded, if the remedy be taken in season. Every family should have it in their closet for the ready and prompt relief of its members. Sickness, suffering, and even life is saved by this timely protection. The prudent should not neglect it, and the wise will not. Keep it by you for the protection it affords by its timely use in sudden attacks.

WISHART'S
PINE TREE TAR CORDIAL
Nature's Great Remedy
FOR ALL
THROAT AND LUNG DISEASES!!

It is the vital principle of the Pine Tree, obtained by a peculiar process in the distillation of the tar, by which its highest medicinal properties are retained. Tar even in its crude state has been recommended by eminent physicians of every school. It is confidently offered to the afflicted for the following simple reasons:

1. It cures,—not by abruptly stopping the cough—but by dissolving the phlegm and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter causing the irritation. In cases of seated consumption it both prolongs and renders less burdensome the life of the afflicted sufferer.

2. Its healing principle acts upon the irritated surface of the lungs, penetrating to each diseased part, relieving pain, and subduing inflammation.

3. It purifies and enriches the blood. Positively curing all humors, from the common pimple or eruption to the severest cases of Scrofula. Thousands of affidavits could be produced from those who have felt the beneficial effects of Pine Tree Tar Cordial in the various diseases arising from impurities of the blood.

4. It invigorates the digestive organs and restores the appetite.

All who have known or tried Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's remedies require no references from us, but the names of thousands cured by them can be given to any one who doubts our statement. Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Great American Dyspepsia Pills and Worm Sugar Drops have never been equalled. For sale by all Druggists and Storekeepers, and at

The Monastic Libraries.

The seals of some of the oldest and most valuable monastic libraries in Italy are at last to be broken. Priceless manuscripts yet uncollected, works of inestimable value for historical investigations, have long been buried and closely guarded within the walls of the convents. If any persistent explorer has gained admission to them, he has still been met with such vexatious restrictions as made the libraries practically as inaccessible as if they were on Mt. Athos or Sinai. Now these treasures, with the important exception of those contained in the Vatican, are to be as free to the student as if they were placed on the shelves of the British Museum or in the alcoves of our own public library. The commission on the property of the suppressed convents in Rome have determined to preserve three only out of the forty libraries intact. These are the Casanatense in the Minerva, the Dominican monastery where the Inquisition held its sittings, the Angelica, belonging to the Augustinian order, and the Allessandrina in the University, the three largest and most important libraries, after the Vatican, in the city. They contain together a little over 300,000 volumes. Of the books in the other monasteries, there are to be selected 600,000 volumes, half of which are to be divided nearly equally amongst these three libraries. The commission proposed to give the 300,000 volumes which are left to the municipality of Rome for a city library. This is to contain all the works relating to the history of the city, its topography, chronology, laws, descriptions of life and customs and the works of famous Romans. In all these departments it will be particularly rich and interesting. There is also to be placed in the city library the musical archives of the order of the Oratory, whose founder, St. Filippo Neri, was the reputed inventor of the oratorio, so called from the Oratory or building in which these compositions were first performed. Amongst these archives are preserved many very valuable and still unpublished works of renowned masters, as Palestrina and others.—Boston Advertiser.

A Convenient Way to Measure Land.

It is frequently desirable to measure a given plat of ground or a portion of a field, and a simple method, such as the following, for which we are indebted to an exchange, will be of use to many of our readers. Surveyors are not always at a convenient distance to attend to such little jobs, and even when they do reside in the immediate vicinity one does not always care to incur the expense incident to such a small job. If the lines are already established the plat can be measured with sufficient accuracy for all practical purposes by means of a neat rod-pole, made as follows: Procure a stick of pine, whitewood, basswood or almost any other timber, one and a half inches square and sixteen and one-half feet long. Dress each end, tapering from the middle, so that the pole will be one and a half inches square at the middle and about half an inch square at each end. Such a pole will be light and quite stiff. Now graduate one side with the marks representing feet and inches, and graduate another side to indicate a surveyor's links. A pole one rod in length must be equal to twenty-five links. To divide one side correctly let a mechanic's compass be adjusted so that the points will divide the distance into twenty-five equal spaces or links. A line can be measured with a surveyor's chain.

Now, then, if a person does not understand how to multiply chains and links, let him compute the measurement by square feet. In one acre there are 43,560 square feet. An intelligent schoolboy can measure the length and breadth of a square plat, multiply the one by the other, and divide the product by 43,560, which will give the number of acres and the number of square feet representing the fraction of an acre. If it is desirable to measure a triangular plat, two sides of which lie at right angles, measure these two sides, multiply the distance in feet one by the other, and divide that product by two, which will indicate the number of square feet, by 43,560, and the quotient will represent the number of acres. —Phrenological Journal.

Iceland.

The Danish Government has just granted a very liberal charter to the Icelanders, who have long been clamoring for almost entire separation from the old country. The charter is to go into operation on the 1st of August next, when will be clebrated the thousandth anniversary of the colonization of the island. In all matters concerning the island particularly, and not belonging to the Imperial Legislature, Iceland will have its own legislation and Administration. The national representation is the Althing, consisting of thirty members elected by popular suffrage on a very liberal franchise adapted to the wants of the country, and six nominated by the King. A Minister for Iceland, nominated by the King and responsible to the Althing, is the head of the Administration. The independence of the tribunals, freedom of individuals, liberty of faith and of the press, of public meeting and equality of citizens before the law, are all guaranteed. The Crown Prince of Denmark will probably visit the island during the millennial festivities.

HOW TO PRESERVE A BOUQUET.—When you receive a bouquet, sprinkle it lightly with fresh water; then put it into a vessel containing some soapsuds, which nourish the roots and keep the flowers as good as new. Take the bouquet out of the suds every morning, and lay it sideways in fresh water, the stock entering first into the water; keep it there a minute or two, then take it out and sprinkle the flowers lightly by the hand with pure water. Replace the bouquet in the soapsuds and the flowers will bloom as fresh as when gathered. The soapsuds need to be changed every third day. By observing these rules, a bouquet may be kept bright and beautiful for at least one month, and will last longer in a very passable state; but the attention to the fair but frail creatures, as directed above, must be strictly observed, or "the last rose of summer" will not be "left blooming alone," but will perish.—American Artisan.

A Hero.

The Pittsburgh Dispatch contains one of those commonplace histories of heroism in the discharge of ordinary duty which we note with emphasis from time to time, not only because of their own stirring meaning, but for the indication they give of the tone and temper and the ruling motives of the great under-mass of American society; the men and women whose names never find their way into the papers; never even enter into the calls for public meetings or charitable subscriptions; who go through life with one day's meals, and work with no better prospect than to begin another the next morning; who know nothing of the college-graduate's lofty resolves or aims; never analyzed their own souls æsthetically; would set down Longfellow's Psalm of Life, or Carlyle's Thoughts of Living as sentimental bosh, yet, when occasion demands, live and die in their cheap houses, beside their tools or their engine, simply and grandly as though all the years gone before had been a solemn preparatory vigil. Take this young fellow Sutton, for instance—a subordinate of some kind or other on a railway train. "The conductor," the Dispatch states, "sent him to the rear to flag another train coming up behind. On his way he fell on the track and was run over by five cars and the caboose. His legs were completely cut off above the knee, but, remembering his orders, he cleared the track of the dismembered portions of his own body, and, taking a flag out of his pocket, waved it until he had stopped the approaching train. Without this, a collision would have been inevitable."

It is only necessary for us to repeat the story. All our college and schoolboys have histories of countless heroic deaths stored away with the rest of their book-lore. They can tell you how Cato paused, sword in hand, and Socrates waited to sacrifice a cock—so coolly did these old sages watch death's coming. Their eyes will flash, and their ingenuous faces redden, and their hearts beat to loftier measure thereafter at the hackneyed recital of how Nelson died like a woman in the first breath of his great victory; how kings have died like kings, on the scaffold, a spectacle for the attentive world; how unnumbered young heroes in our own war leaped to meet death, as though he bore crowns for them. Such facts of history are ennobling and good for any American boy to learn and remember, be the book Latin or English. But the notice in the morning's paper of this poor railway workman throwing his own severed legs from the track, and signaling the train before he lay down to die, is of more import to him than all the others, and more wholesome in its meaning.—New York Tribune.

The Horse Found to be Indigenous to the American Continent.

The New York Tribune recently gave a synopsis of the geological researches of Prof. Marsh, of Yale College, in Wyoming and Utah Territories. The Professor's chief object has been to ascertain if the horse did not exist on this continent prior to its introduction by the Spaniards, after the discovery of America by Columbus. In this object Prof. Marsh has been successful. He finds that far back in the mutations of the earth's development, in what is called the eocene period, the horse was indigenous to this continent. First, in point of time, he finds the remains of the orohippus, or mountain horse, with a skeleton scarcely larger than that of the fox, with four toes on his fore, and three on his hind feet, all of which reached the ground.

Next, after the lapse of ages, and in the miocene period, appears the miohippus, with a skeleton as large as that of a sheep, and with three toes on every foot, all reaching the ground. At this epoch there also appears a variety of the horse called the anchitherium, with the two outer toes on each foot much smaller than those of the miohippus. Next, and in the pliocene formation—which is next above the miocene—comes a development of the horse with a skeleton about equal to that of the ass. There are several varieties of the horse in this period, most of which have three toes before and behind. In no case, however, do the outer toes touch the ground, but they are like the posterior hooflets of the modern deer and ox.

There is also one variety, in the pliocene period, which has a deep depression of the skull under the eye, and but one toe—that is, its foot is like that of the modern horse. Lastly, at the very top of the pliocene formation, and just where it is passing into the quaternary, or last stratum of the earth's development, the bones of the true or modern horse are for the first time found. The fossils discovered by Prof. Marsh show that the horse of that period equaled the modern horse in size, and in some cases surpassed it.

These are exceedingly interesting discoveries, and indicate an orderly progression of development of the horse, as it now exists, from a primitive type, closely allied to animals of an inferior genus.

Men Without Hearts.

We sometimes meet with men who seem to think that any indulgence in an affectionate feeling is a weakness. They will return from a journey, and greet their families with a distant dignity, and move among their children with the cold and lofty splendor of an iceberg surrounded by its fragments. There is hardly a more unnatural sight on earth than one of these fathers without a heart. Who that has experienced the joys of friendship, would be robbed of the hidden treasure of his heart? and values sympathy and affliction, would not rather lose all that is beautiful in nature's scenery? Cherish, then, your heart's best affections. Indulge in the warm and gushing emotions of filial, paternal and fraternal love.

ENGLISH GIRLS.—Kate Field has an exalted opinion of American women, and places a corresponding low estimate on the English females. Kate is right, says the Brooklyn Argus. English girls, as a general thing, are poor trash. They measure over forty inches around the waist, wear loose gaiters, eschew late hours and lily-white, and enjoy a state of health that is positively vulgar.

VINEGAR BITTERS
PURELY VEGETABLE FREE FROM ALCOHOL
DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA VINEGAR BITTERS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelminitics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

The dry weather threatens very seriously the prospect of the coming crops. The wheat fields are looking well and give promise of a fair yield. Not so with grass and oats. Both these crops will undoubtedly be short unless a bounteous supply of rain comes soon. The best remedy we know of to supply the deficiency of hay and oats is to sow plenty of the Hungarian grass seed. We have known most excellent crops come from this seed, sown as late as the 10th of July. It is considered the most nutritious of all the grasses, and is relished by stock of every grade and kind. In many cases they prefer it to the best timothy grass.

Gen. Sheridan clearly proved his right to the title of "Little Phil." at the late reunion of the officers of the Potomac. In referring to a proposition to invite certain Confederate officers to join with them in their celebrations, he said he was not in favor of inviting them but when they came forward and solicited the favor he would be willing to grant it. A generous victor would hardly wait for his vanquished foe to humbly ask his favor. High-minded and generous men are not made of that kind of stuff; they do not seek to hmiliate after they have conquered. "Little Phil." is appropriately named.

Andrew Johnson concluded his address in Memphis Saturday night, as follows. "I will simply say that I know I have been charged with being ambitious. Ambitious! I am ambitious [Applause.] And I do not think I would be worthy of being called a man unless I were ambitious. [Applause.] I am ambitious of acquiring a reputation among these people that I have been a faithful representative and that I have stood upon the watch tower of my country, and defended and vindicated their rights, when they were not in a condition to do it themselves. I am ambitious of their esteem of their respects and their confidence, for the reason that I have done my duty to my God, to my country, and to my family. Yes I am ambitious! I have lived and toiled for the people because I wanted their appropriation; and when the time shall come when my connection is to be severed from this people, and from things that are mortal, when the lamp of life is about flickering its last, the most pleasing thought that can pass through my mind, will be to feel and know that, when dead and gone, I still occupy a place in the respect and affection and heart of my countrymen."

FROM THE FAR WEST.

CICERO, MADISON CO., MONTANA, May 16th, 1874.

Mr. Editor:—Please allow me thr'o your valuable paper, to present to your readers a few shattered ideas concerning this country, its resources, etc. I am aware that the merits as well as the demerits of Montana, have, by some been greatly exagerated, and especially by the people among the "tadpole swamps" of down east, who are totally ignorant of the natural advantages and desirability of this Territory as a home.

Being unaccustomed to writing for the press, I am likely to have this article badly mixed, however, it will be—as the mountaineers phrase it—on the dead square.

This county is situated on the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains, in the south-western part of the Territory. It contains the grand ranges of mountains; extensive and fertile valleys with numerous rapid streams, tributaries of the Missouri.

Virginia City, the county seat of Madison county, and capital of the Territory, is situated on Alder creek, in a little basin at the foot-hills of the Tobacco Root mountains, has an altitude of 5480 feet. The wealth of Alder Gulch created this city, but as Alder dust is not so abundant as it was in time past, the town has seen its best days. It is quite a lively business place, however, and is second in the Territory to Helena only.

Agricultural lands consist of prairie bottom and table lands which are rich and well adapted to agriculture; though owing to the frequent frosts, only the hardier kinds of vegetation are successfully raised in this county, but in other portions of the country not so highly elevated, all kinds of vegetables common to the northern States. Wheat oats and barley are raised here in great abundance; fifty bushel of wheat to the acre being no uncommon yield. Irrigation is a necessity for the raising of full crops. Farm laborers get from $40 to $60 per month.

Stock. This as a stock country can hardly be excelled, the mild winters, scarcity of snow in the valleys, and foot-hills, its beautiful streams of pure water flowing from the mountains, and the quality and quantity of grasses, all tend to make it a natural grazing country. Large herds of cattle, horses and sheep, roam and fatten in the hills, at all seasons of the year, with no shelter but the skies, and no food but bunch-grass. This grass dies early in the season, but retains its nutritious properties all winter, it thus constitutes a standing hay—only it seems to be far better in its effects—makes excellent beef. There are some good stock in this country, and much attention is given to breeding and I am convinced that in a few years Montana will furnish breeds worthy of the great advantages nature has bestowed upon the stock raiser here.

Mining is the chief pursuit of the people, many rich leads of gold and silver bearing quartz are being developed. Placer mines, however yield the greater proportion of the gold production. Diggings have been lately discovered on the Jefferson river, which are said to be very rich. Quite a stampede has already taken place, the river has been staked for a distance of ten miles below Hell Canon. If these diggings prove to be as good as the present prospect indicate, they will no doubt rival in extent and richness the famed old Alder of '62.

Schools. The public schools of Montana are in a very prosperous condition for so new a country. For the following statistics concerning schools in the Territory, we are indebted to worthy Superintendent Hedges.

The whole number of children of school age—between four and twenty-one years—in the Territory is	3,517
No. attending school during the year	1,818
The per centage of attendance of those enrolled	.50
Number of organized school districts	91
Number of schools taught during the year	90
Number male teachers employed	50
" female "	49
Average length of school in days	82½
Number of school houses	51
Number of districts with graded schools—to-wit: one each in Virginia, Helena and Deer Lodge	3
No. of private schools taught in the Territory during the year	11
Number of scholars attending same	149
Number of children not attending any school	1,497
Amount of money raised for school by county tax	$41 350 42
Amount raised by district tax—to-wit: in Madison county	934 55
Amount from all sources apportioned during the year	33,161 50
Average pay of teachers per mouth	68 41

We have a delightful climate in winter as well as in summer, the air is pure, dry, and healthful. There is no fever and ague, or other diseases common to damp and changeable climates. If our grub is course, our appetites are sufficient to stand it off.

Railroads may be considered as the first of the many needs of the country, and until they are built little or nothing can be done to invite settlers and capital. The early completion of the Northern Pacific, which is now being constructed, will do more to open up the country than any other improvement.

The future of Montana is assured. Those who have made their homes in this young territory know that they are living in a region of wealth and inexhaustable resources, where labor and true effort are certainly and bountifully rewarded.

A MOUNTAINIZED HOOSIER.

A COMMENDABLE PROGRAMME.

The newly elected United States Senator from Connecticut, Hon. William W. Eaton, is credited with being a Democrat of the olden school. From all we can hear of the gentlemen there seems to be no ground for doubting that he is also a very talented and thoroughly honest man. And, if we may judge from the few remarks he made in response to a serenade after his election, he has laid down a programme for the Government of his action in the Senate which will commend itself to the favorable opinion of all friends of good Government. Said he: "I am a hard-money man. I believe in currency for the people and the same for the Government. I do not believe in allowing any man to stick his arms into the people's money up to his shoulder-blades. I do not believe in corrupt things. I go to Washington to stand by fair administration, and to protect what belongs to the people of this country; to protect for the laborer what little land the railroad rings have not already stolen. That, in fact, is my mission. I will defend the honor of my State as I would defend the honor of my wife. For you I will do my whole duty. My heart will not fail although my head may." If Mr. Eaton follows this programme closely upon his entrance of the senate, the people of Connecticut will have every reason to rejoice that their Legislature has exchanged Buckingham for Eaton.

Pioneer Sketches

—OF—

DeKALB COUNTY

NUMBER FOURTEEN.

They are honest and some of them religious, before the whites gave them fire water, and stole their ponies and blankets. They used frequently to apply to me to take away 'bad Indian,' when any of their number misbehaved. After the whites had created in them the unnatural appetite, they were very fond of whiskey. One day a poor squaw came to my house, and begged hard for whiskey. Palmer took the pepper sauce bottle, and handed her. She took a very hearty drink, but as soon as she took the bottle from her lips, she began to spit, sputter, slaver and holler "pizen pizen," while Bill Palmer rolled and laughed to his hearts content. After her sufferings were over, I and my good Sophia took a little laugh at her, and she never troubled us again.

The Pottawattomies and Miamies were the principal tribes in DeKalb. Their manner of buring the dead was, to dig a grave 18 inches deep, put in the dead, cover with leaves, and then build a tight pen of poles over the grave. Sometimes they cut down a tree, split off a piece from the top of the log—dug out a trough—put in the body, and then cover it up closely with poles. They burnt the leaves around these burying places every fall, to keep the fire in the woods from getting to them. They disliked very much to have their dead interfered with, yet it was done by unprincipled whites. It was not uncommon to see their graves opened, the bones scattered around, and the skull of an Indian set out on a log in full sight.

The spring of 1837 was very gladly hailed by the settlers, after stemming the storms and suffering the privations of a hard winter. During this season, settlers began to come in more plentifully, and several cabins went up in Auburn. I had given one third of the lots to the county; receiving no compensation but the assurance that it would be permanently the county seat. In most cases too, I gave a a lot to every settler building thereon. This year (1837,) I and Mr. Ogden built the saw mill. The town continued steadily to improve, and has been blest with good inhabitants, with but few exceptions. Much of the land in the county was taken up by speculators. This hindered its settlement to a considerable degree for some years. The crash of banks, in 1837 and 8, was severely felt, and many suffered for want of food and raiment, 1836 and 7, were healthy seasons. 1838, was more sickly—1889 still more so, from that time until 1850, there was more or less of bilious complaints every season. Since 1850, both town and country has been generally healthy."

Thus ends for the present the narrative of Mr. Park; but we are promised a few more notes, especially concerning the early efforts of "Black legs," to get a foot hold on this county, while he was sheriff.

The first board of county commissioners met in the same month in which they were elected, namely July 1837, and appointed the following county officers, viz: Clerk pro. tem., Wesley Park; Treasurer, Wesley Park; County agent, Byron Baunel; County Assessor, John Blair; Co. Collector, Ingman; County road Commissioner, Samuel Eakright; County Surveyor, Joseph Miller; County Commissioner of the three per cent. fund, R. R. Lownsbury.

At this session, the board allowed Wesley Park $50.84, for the following list of services, viz: For services as Sheriff until this session; for services as Commissioner, in running out the Fort Wayne and Cold Water State road, and also the Goshen and Defiance State road. How would officers now-a-adays, like to do so many, and so laborious services for so little pay?

The Commissioners to lay out the Fort Wayne and Cold Water road, were W. Park, G. Gilmore and —— Murray. Those tolay out the Goshen and Defiance were, Park and Hostetter. The latter resided on the Haw Patch, in Noble County, and never came to view the road. Park went on alone, and got the next Legislature to legalize his act. The chain carriers on the last mentioned road, were, Henry Feigler and John Miller. Joseph Miller surveyed both roads.

At this first session, the board organized Franklin township, then embracing Troy; and, at the September session, Union township embracing Jackson, Richland, Fairfield and Smithfield. W. Park was appointed supervisor of the whole 5 Congressional townships, with authority to work all the hands. Wonder how he would like to be Supervisor of all this district now? At this fall session, Butler and Wilmington townships were also organized; leaving DeKalb still to embrace Concord, Newville and Stafford. The name was changed to Concord, in March 1838.

The two force pumps on Main street are doing good work in laying the dust but the most of the work is at the pumps. Down on the brakes.

About the neatest fence yet erected in town is that of J. W. Shaffer's on South Main street. It is something different from what we have had and realy makes a handsome appearance.

U. Grant, B. Butler, O. Morton and a few others wanted us to remain at Washington a few weeks to see how they run things, but we told them we had a couple acres of corn to plow and it would be out of the question.

Our good-looking friend, H. H. Stamets of the firm of Stamets & Wile, has renounced single cussedness and is now in the summer of his glory, having wood and won the accomplished Miss Hattie Summers, of Hicksville, Ohio. May they live long and been happy, as Rip used to say.

LOST—On last Tuesday, a pocket book containing $150 in money and several papers, among them a tax receipt. It was lost between Swineford's stable and Monry's school house. A liberal reward will be given for its return to Sim. Snyder, at the Swineford in this place.

During our absence a list of some 12 or more of our subscribers got mislaid and the failed to get their papers. They were single packages, and when they see this they will be gratified to know why the paper did not arrive. We will try and not have this occur more than once a mouth hereafter.

Our white dorg has taken a furlough and gone to the country. He's not a sooner dog, he's a setter, splendid too.—The way he is enjoying a good set under a shady tree these hot days, brings tears to our eyes. Anybody having a stray white dog with a black spot on left ear loafing around, may consider it ours, and act accordingly.

That was a good joke on Holman Hamilton that Senator Pratt innocently perpetrated at Washington the other day.—A small party were talking about the aspirants for Congress in the Fort Wayne District, and when Mr. Hamilton's name was mentioned Mr. Pratt earnestly inquired on what side Mr. H. was running Mr. H's reputation as a Democrat has hardly become national.

T. J. Tolan, Esq., of Delphos, Ohio, summitted a most beautiful plan for a jail to the Commissioners this week.—Many new features are embraced in the plan, and taken altogether it cannot be excelled. Mr. Tolan has drawn plans upon which a great many public buildings have been built in Ohio, and he has the reputation of being the finest architect in the State. We have not learned whether the Commissioners have concluded to act in this matter or not.

Are we to celebrate this year or not?—It is a matter that has heretofore been left to our business men, but we see no reason why all should not take an interest in the metter. If properly managed it will add to the credit of our town, it will bring some here, perhaps, that were never here before, and the occasion should be appropriately observed. We are in favor of a good old fashioned celebration with features enough in it to attract a good crowd.

BEAUTIFUL—We are in receipt of a most handsome cake, made at the new Bakey establishment of Youngling, Gibson & Bro. We don't know what is on the inside, but if it is half as good as the exterior is beautiful, we shall certainly enjoy a few short seasons of unalloyed pleasure in its annihilation. They will be short, too. It takes an immense cake to withstand our capacity for sweet things. This cake is beautifully frescoed (we don't know what else to call it) in sugar, with the words: "Compliments of Y. G. & Bro., Props. Auburn City Bakery," handsomely cast thereon. The donors have our profound thanks and best wishes.

Some of our readers may remember the landolet which Attorney General Williams bought a few months ago in Washington at the Governments expense. He hasn't got it now. Judge Wright of this State has it and proposes to keep it, though Mr. Williams would like to have it back again. The judge placed it at our disposal one afternoon, and accompanied by manager Ainsworth, we were taken down Pensylvania Avenue in fine style. The fact is we felt so proud we did not know anybody. It may be necessary to state, that we had been in the city but one day, and had not formed a very extensive acquaintance. It cost $2,300, but a newspaper man got hold of the fact that the Government had paid for it, and he blowed, so Williams had to give it up. The Judge bought it for $1260. It is one of those double back action fellows non-reversible, et comatabus, if you know what that is, for we don't. It can be made a close carriage or open barouche with little trouble and is lined with crimson velvet, that cost $12 per yard.

Return of the Indiana Editors.

A Magnificent Excursion.

We have had the pleasure of attending several journalistic excursions in the past few years, all of which were greatly enjoyed, but our late tour to the great cities of the east leaves the others so far in the rear, that a camparison is out of the question. It was one grand series of sight-seeing, embracing historic and national features, around which cluster those associations dear to every American, and it would be impossible to visit a like number of points of corresponding interest in the same time even if the line of inspection was extended to Europe, where centuries have contributed, through history and legendary tradition to enlarge and emblazon the acnevements of humanity.

We have already given a brief account of our departure and arrival at Washington, and our reception there. On Monday Gen. Coburn, of this State, made a motion in the House for that body to extend the courtesies of the floor to the Indiana Editors which was carried, and in a few minutes thereafter we were hob-nobbing with Ben Butler, Sunset Cox, Fernando Wood, Gen. Garfield, Speaker Blaine and other notables of that exquisite body. Butler is a rare old fellow, one in a thousand a hard worker, and flourishes from a peculiar audacity he possesses, which so takes everybody by surprise that they have not the power to resist. To illustrate the superb modesty he personates, he offered to take half the Indiana Editors made out of the may items he occasioned, and would be willing to leave out the few that were in his favor. He keeps four clerks busily employed, and does a great amount of labor. He has more brains than any other man in the House and some of his associates even go so far as to declare him honest. If we could get that spoon business out of our mind we might believe this.

Sunset Cox was making one of his facetious harangues when we entered, and so musical are these attempts generally that he gets the ear of every member, an honor that few enjoy. Wood is a tall fine-looking gentleman, with a stiff white mustache, and his genial, pleasant manner makes him popular. There is a great deal of life and animation in the House, so much so that the speaker often finds it necessary to curb it by sundry raps with the gabel. There is a proneness to gush that is almost irresistable, especially to a new member who wants his constituents to know that he is working like a stage horse. When our good, honest old farmers get a printed speech from their Congressman and read it over carefully, they must sometimes try to imagine what a sensation it created at the time of its delivery, but the fact is perhaps there was not a half-dozen heard it, and if pressed for time it was ordered to be printed with out having been delivered at all.

This is almost necessary from the fact that the time of the House would be consumed in speech making to the detriment of the country at large. Scenes in the House sometimes defy description. It is a perfect rabble, half-a-dozen yelling out "Mr. Chairman" at once, some walking around, others standing up, a few at their desks and more in the cloak rooms smoking, the chairman hammering away with his gabel, the reading clerk trying to drown the gabel with his stentorian voice All these things taken together go to make up a terrible animated but rather an undignified assemblage. From our view that day we came to the conclusion that we did not want to go to the House, but would have no objection to be a member of that more grave and sober body of men called

THE SENATE.

We were permitted to occupy the gallery of the Senate Chamber and gaze on the assembled wisdom of the nation, and we felt that it was a fair selection. This is a prosy, sedate body, and there is an air of dignity about it very impressive to the stranger. There is a great deal of labor performed by these two bodies. All their time is not devoted to making speeches, although there are a few who are chronic speech-makers. Senator Pratt remarked that he had often devoted eighteen hours in one day to congressional labor. He is one of these honest, faithful servants who are creditable to the nation and the people they represent. To the uninitiated to be a Congressman would seem an easy position, but the one that discharges his duties faithfully, has but little time to work up rings or get rich by speculations as some have done. In the afternoon we went to Mt. Vernon, the home of Washington, and gazed into the gloomy vault that contained the marble coffins of this great man and his wife. The old mansion in which they lived and died still remains together with the out buildings that made up the homestead. It is a grand old place, beautifully situated on the west bank of the Potomac, where a most lovely view of the surrounding country can be enjoyed. The bedstead on which Washington died has been on exhibition in the room where he breathed his last, but the sacreligious hand of the relic hunter spared it not, and it would have been carried away in small places had it not been hidden. Another one was made exactly like the original, which was soon hacked to pieces by those who thoughtlessly took it for the real one, and several new ones have been made since, all perhaps to go in the same way.

It is a matter of astonishment to notice what these relic hunters will do. One fellow in our party slipped out a pebble from the floor of the vault, thinking no doubt he was getting a prize not to be gained by everybody, when the Superintendent noticing the action, said: "That's right, take all you want. We throw a load in from the river every few days just to humor you fellows"

Quite a number of things used in the days of Washington, even to articles of dress, were on exhibition. The old stable bell that called his hostler still hangs to the side of the house, and the tree planted by his own hands was green and thrifty. When we entered the large room where the state dinners were always given, we tried to imagine the scenes presented there in the revolutionary times, as for instance on the occassion of Lafayette's visit, and wondered how it would compare with that of to-day, in the city but a few miles away. In all our visits in and around Washington there seemed to be one thing ever present to the view, the magnificent dome of the Capitol. Look from whatever point you would it seemed to be omnipresent, its handsome proportions growing still more beautiful from each successive point. There is not a building in the world that will compare with it in beauty of architecture and grandeur.

Our National Capitol is now the most handsome city in the world. It has been greatly improved and beautified, though the process of beautifying has cost millions. The boss ring of the country has had the job of improving the Capitol, while engaged in the work of improvement, have not forgot to improve their chances. The Sanborn investigation now in session there, shows up some of the corruptions of this beautiful ring. In external beauty our beloved capitol is a model, but who shall estimate the wicked schemes daily placed on foot by the army of office-holders and office-seekers for personal aggrandizement. When a man fails to accumulate a fortune and finds that he does not posess the elements of success in a legitimate business way, he goes to Washington and finds a host of friends already in advance of him, ready to sacrifice their finer feelings for a government position. "A fellow feeling makes us wondrous kind." We are not one of those who believe that there are no honest men in Washington, but then there are a precious sight of them that find human nature very weak, when a job is proposed. The office-holder is importuned by the office-seeker, and something must be done. No chance must be lost for a re-election. This or that fellow may make a fuss, and he must be provided for, and in this general clamor many a poor Congressman is to be pitied. This is the case only with those who affiliate with the party in power.

President Grant done us great honor by being present at the reception given us by the Indiana citizens resident at the Capitol. Of course his speeches are never edifying, but then he was there to please Morton, who was somewhat ruffled on the currency bill veto. Our Senator introduced him in a very neat, well worded speech, and we don't know but what we may have been the means of bringing about a harmony of feeling between these two great men. Grant has good common sense, excellent judgement and is a good judge of human nature and horses. If he had half the depth of mind of Morton, Thurman or Carpenter he would be a great man, but unfortunately he lacks in early education. We believe our President likes position, likes homage from the people is ambitious, and could play Richard III in real life to perfection. There's a kingly air about him that cannot be mistaken, something so majestic and commanding, a loftiness that seems to look down upon humanity below and say I have little sympathy for you. It always has been claimed that there was but little sympathy between Grant and the people We did not make any inquires about a 3d term, but if Grant wants it he would try for it even against the will of two-thirds of his party.

On Tuesday morning we left Washington for Baltimore, after having been splendidly treated in everything. We were especially under obligations to Maj. Saylor, our representative, and other Indianians in Congress, and among them we must not fail to mention Billy Williams, as he has been the most popular man in this part of Indiana. True, he went for the salary grab, but after seeing that beautiful block of residences he has erected on Capitol Hill, and considering the near approach of the panic, we can't find it in our heart to blame him. Besides he swindled the contractors who were swindling the city out of millions and we ought to be grateful for this effort upon his part. Billy has made money, but then that's natural with him. We never despise a man that accumulates the filthy lucre. Tom Taylor, of Fort Wayne, has found out that publishing a weekly paper is not one of the most lucrative occupations in the world, has taken up his residence in Washington, and is in the Navy Department.—We were pleased to meet him and his excellent lady in the enjoyment of a fascinating city life. Our old friend Frank Case was there, too, to bid us welcome and show us some of the fine points of the city and he seemed never to weary in contributing to our convenience.

Our fellow citizen young Tim Dick, as he is familiarly known, met us on our arrival, and showed us many attentions for which we shall ever be grateful. There is nothing so advantagious as to have some one in the city well posted to assist you in sight-seeing.

Baltimore is a grand old place noted for its Druid Park, Monumental Square and Oysters. It is a very busy place and its narrow streets are generally thronged by a rushing tide of humanity and vehicles. Here we saw the splendid game of base ball between the Red Stockings, of Boston, and Baltimore, in which they stood 3 to 2. We were also favored with seats to see Booth play Hamlet in the evening. We left Baltimore about 8 o'clock Wednesday morning, and after a three hours ride we safely landed in the Quaker city—Philadelphia. Our reception was the most cordial of any place on the route. Conveyances were in readiness at the depot to take us to the Continental, through unfortunately for us it commenced to rain on our arrival and continued until evening. We found about an hour's time to take a short ride about 4 o'clock to Fairmont Park, where a military review of the fine soldiery of this city was going on Thursday morning we visited Independence Hall, and saw the old bell that first rang out for liberty. We went through the U. S. Mint, the splendid Masonic building and then visited the Centenial grounds where it is proposed to celebrate our one-hundreth anniversary, by a grand exposition, open to the world. The grounds are extensive and surpassingly beautiful, and a more appropriate place could not be found. This celebration of right ought to be in the great city that first heard that immortal declaration that made us free and equal. We notice there is considerable jealousy awakened in smaller places like New York, Cincinnati and Chicago, but we suggest that our Quaker friends do not heed them, but redouble their exertions to bring about this grand achivement; and we believe they will. They have the energy and enterprise, and when once a project is undertaken in Philadelphia it has never been know to fail.—We cannot forget the kindness extended to us by the Public Ledger office. Mr. McKeen, the manager, was with us everywhere, and done his utmost to make our visit enjoyable. We were provided with carriages, the expense of which was alone borne by this office, and lunches and refreshments were given with out stint. We received more attention from the press here than at any other point and we are sure none who participated will ever forget this generous reception. It is a pleasure to meet such gentlemen as Joel Cook, J. V. Whitaker, A. B. Burk and Alex. Rumsy, all agreeable and genial fellows connected with the editoral staff of the Ledger. This office is one of the finest in the world, both externally and internally, and it is only equalled in its harmony of parts by its whole-souled proprietor, Geo. W. Childs, Esq. He was not at home at the time but he was ably represented by Mr. McKean, the only one possessing the ability to act as the substitute of the great Ledger man.

(Owing to a want of space we will be compelled to conclude our report next week.

Strawberry Festival.

The ladies of the M. E. Church will give a strawberry festival next Wednesday evening, June 10th at the new bakery building on Main-st. This will be the first of the season and it is hoped there will be a general attendance. The entire building both above and below will be used, and there will be ample accommodations for all. Music and other features will be added.

From Druggists.

There is no case of Dyspepsia that Green's August Flower will not cure. Come to the Drug Store of Davenport & Co., and inquire about it. If you suffer from costiveness, Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Indigestion, Liver Complaint, or derangement of the System, try it. Two or three doses will relieve you.

Boschee's German Syrup is now sold in every town and City in the United States. We have not less than five hundred letters from Druggists, saying it is the best medicine they ever sold for Consumption, Throat or Lung disease. 75 cents per bottle.

The enterprising town of Altona, in this county, has a correspondent. He writes to the Laporte Argus as follows: "Altona is situated on the line of the Baltimore road, in DeKalb county, 110 miles east of Laporte and six miles west of Auburn, the county seat of this county. This village has one store and a saw mill. I am working for the railroad company. The company have completed the piling in the big tamarack swamp, where they drive piling 615 feet before finding bottom. The face of the country here is rather broken, with sand and clay soil, but productive, with a heavy growth of timber, such as maple, beech, black walnut, oak and black cherry. The farms are generally small but well tilled, with better buildings than in Laporte county. Nearly every farmer has a bank barn, besides several other small barns.

A boy had his thigh bone broken by a log rolling upon him, and an old lady 80 years old, cut her throat. People are so ugly here that they do not die a natural death but they have to commit suicide that others may get a chance to go to a funeral."

That last sentence is a clincher. He has certainly made the acquaintance of the late minstrel troupe.

Look out for a grand announcement of a new arrival of millinery goods at W. Martin & Co's

They also deal in Osage Orange, Alsike and White clover Lawn Grass, Blue Grass, Red top and all other field and garden seed. Price list sent on application.

TRODDEN DOWN.—A Novel. By Mrs. C. J. Newby. This is the fourth volume of the new, cheap and popular edition of the celebrated novels of Mrs. C. J. Newby now in course of publication by T. B. Peterson & Brothers, Philadelphia. "Trodden down" is a bright and pleasing story, pure in tone, and commendable in spirit. The plot is dramatic, and the manner of its telling, spirited. It is thoroughly entertaining, and is quite out of the coventional beaten track of society novels. It can be unhesitatingly put into any family circle, for the benefit and interest of all who enjoy, in a novel, purity of sentiment faithful delination of character, beauty and force of expression, dramatic interest of its plots, anp high and elevated moral tone. There are no novels which can be more highly recommended for the family circle than Mrs. Newby's, for their brillaincy and vivacity will make them welcome to every reader of cultivated taste. Her novels, "Trodden Down," "Only Temper," "Married," "Kate Kennedy," "Margaret Hamilton," "Right and Left," "Wondrous Strange," "Common Sense," etc., are obtaining a wipespread popularity; in fact equal to any novels that have ever been issued from the press. "Trodden-Down," is issued in a large octavo volume, price Fifty cents, and is for sale by all Booksellers, or copies will be sent to any one, post-paid, by the Publishers, on receipt of price of them.

TWO AMERICAN MAGAZINES.

The excellence of American Magazines has become so well recognized abroad, that one of the leading English Papers, the London Weekly Register, in a recent issue, thus speaks of Scribners' Monthly:

"We are constrained to own that Scribners Monthly carries off the prize against all our shilling monthly serials for brillaincy of illustrations and variety of contents. It is simply a wonderful shilling's worth. Nothing can be more charming than the cuts,—full of force and vigor, the light and shade are managed with truly artistic power. Out of its one and twenty original articles, we really do not know which to chose as best, for each and all are excellent."

Not only is it true that Scribner's Monthly excels the English Magazines, but is "The best of the American Monthlies."

In the extent variety and artistic excellence of its illustrations of American themes, it has never been even approached, much less excelled. It has a larger page and gives a greater variety in its contents than any other of the Standard American Monthlies.

In literary character, and in the brillaincy and ability of its Editorial Departments, it enjoys an equal pre-eminence.

Its conductors started with the definite aim of making it the best magazine in the world, of which they have never for a moment lost sight and they point with pride and pleasure to the May and June numbers, recently issued, and ask for them a candid examination and a careful comparison of their merits with those of other magazines; and they renew their pledge to the public, to strive for still higher excellence the future.

A considerable demand has recently risen in England for St. Nicholas' Scribner's New Magazine for Boys and Girls, one publisher desiring to secure an edition of three thousand of the first bound volume (when completed) with his imprint.

The success of St. Nicholas in this country has been even more remarkable than than that of Scribners Monthly. It is pronounced to be an ideally perfect Magazine for children, and, as is the case with all the best literature for children, it has been found to possess surpassing interest for grown up readers, as well.

The influence of the periodicals of the day can scarcely be estimated, especially upon the rising generation. Parents and teachers cannot afford to be indifferent to this influence, or careless in relation to the character of the literature furnished to their children outside of their school lessons. In St. Nicholas not only are History, Natural Philosophy, Literature, fine arts, and Manufactures presented in an attractive way to young readers, but the children are stimulated to seek information for themselves.

The Publishers will send to any address a specimen number of St. Nicholas, postage pre-paid, on receipt of ten cents, the bare cost of paper and printing. The magazines are sold by all first class Booksellers and Newsdealers, everywhere.

SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY $4 a year, 35c a Number. ST. NICHOLAS $3 a year, 25c a Number.

A TAMMANY Democrat and Republican, in New York, together with an Independent Alderman, Mr. Ottendorf, have united in a report to the Board of Aldermen in which the Police Commissioners are charged with "gross inefficiency, great negligence, and flagrant neglect of law," and the Mayor is urged to remove those who are responsible for the demoralization of the department.... They have mixed conferences, mixed congregations and mixed schools. We do not ask them to adopt our plan; we could not adopt theirs. We refer to these things in order that our position may not be attributed by any to prejudice, resentment or other motives unworthy of Christians." THE Navy Department at Washington has received a detailed report from Commander Belknap, commanding the United States steamer Tuscarora, of his operations between Honolulu and Yokohama, Japan, in deep-sea soundings for the Pacific cable from San Francisco to Japan. Seventy-three casts were made, the deepest being 3,287 fathoms, or nearly three and three-quarters miles. Six submarine mountains were discovered, ranging from 7,000 feet to 12,600 feet in height, and it is believed that these are a part of a continuous range, extending from Japan to the Sandwich Islands. Many specimens of lava were found in the sounding-cups. These soundings have demonstrated the fact that the deepest water in the Northern Pacific is near the Asiatic coast, instead of the American, as has long been believed.

Spanish Life.

Spaniards usually keep their valuables concealed about their houses. In the towns of the interior no one makes use of a bank, preferring to lose the interest on their money rather than risk the principal. The poorer class of Spaniards carry the whole of their worldly goods about them. Their fare is the very simplest. Bread and fruit and fruit and bread, with now and then, for the men, a glass of the rough red wine of the country, is the staple of their sustenance. The only thing about which the Spaniards, high or low, are really particular, is their water. In a country where the women drink nothing whatever but water, year's end to year's end, and the men little else, it is quite necessary to have that little good; and good it is, in all cases. Go into the poorest hut, only tenanted by a few woodcutters, or itinerant miners, and ask for a cup of water, and the little jarro, or porous four-mouthed water-jar, will be unhooked from the peg where it stands in the sun, and you will have a drink of the purest, coldest water, from the choicest spring—water, perhaps, brought from a distance of three miles by the water-carrier. Only be sure you hold the jarro above your head with both hands, and pour the water down your throats in a refreshing stream, for your manners are voted simply indecent if you touch the brim with your lips. Very few among these lower classes can read and write. There are no schools to speak of in the interior; even for the higher classes there are no governesses, and it is no uncommon thing to find a well-born lady not very well up to writing a letter. The lower classes, are, of course, grossly superstitious. Fortune-telling abounds. There is, however, a vast deal of natural courtesy, natural wit, natural intelligence. Uncultivated and uneducated as he is, the Spanish poor man has the manners of a perfect gentleman.

Opening of Girard's Will.

The following is Dr. Cornell's account of the opening of Stephen Girard's will:

"Death having dissolved the powerful spell of a presence which few men have been able to resist, it was to be seen how far his will would be obeyed, now that he was no longer able personally to enforce it. The old man lay dead in his house in Water street. While the public out-of-doors were curious enough to learn what he had done with his money, there was a smaller number within the house, the kindred of the deceased, in whom this curiosity raged like a mania. They invaded the cellars of the house, and, bringing up bottles of the old man's choice wine, kept up a continuous carouse. Surrounding Mr. Duane, who had been present at Mr. Girard's death and remained to direct his funeral, they demanded to know if there was a will. To silence their indecent clamor, he told them there was, and that he was one of the executors. On hearing this, their desire to learn its contents rose to a fury. In vain the executors reminded them that decency required that the will should not be opened till after the funeral. They even threatened legal proceedings if the will was not immediately produced; and at length, to avoid a public scandal, the executors consented to have it read. These affectionate relatives being assembled in a parlor of the house in which the body of their benefactor lay, the will was taken from the iron safe by one of the executors.

When he opened it and was about to read, he chanced to look over the top of the document at the company before him. No artist that ever had held a brush could depict the passion of curiosity, the frenzy of expectation, expressed in that group of pallid faces. Every individual among them expected to leave the appartment the conscious possessor of millions, for no one had dreamed of the probability of his leaving the bulk of his estate to the public. If they had ever heard of his saying that no one should be a gentleman on his money, they had forgotten or disbelieved it. The opening paragraphs of the will all tended to confirm their hopes, since the bequests to existing institutions were of small amount. But the reader soon reached the part of the will which assigned to ladies and gentlemen present such trifling sums as five thousand dollars, ten thousand, twenty thousand; and he arrived ere long at the section which disposed of millions to great cities and poor children. Some of them made not the slightest attempt to conceal their disappointment and disgust. Men were there who had married with a view to share the wealth of Girard, and had been waiting years for his death. Women were there who had looked to that event as the beginning of their enjoyment of life. The imagination of the reader must supply the details of a scene which we might think dishonored human nature, if we could believe that human nature was meant to be subjected to such a strain. It had been better, perhaps, if the rich man, in his own lifetime, had made his kindred partake of his superabundance, especially as he had nothing else that he could share with them. They attempted, on grounds that seemed utterly frivolous, to break the will, and employed the most eminent counsel to conduct their case, but without effect. They did, however, succeed in getting the property acquired after the execution of the will, which Girard, disregarding the opinion of Mr. Duane, attempted by a postscript to include in the will. 'It will not stand,' said the lawyer. 'Yes, it will,' said Girard. Mr. Duane, knowing his man, was silent; and the courts have since decided that his opinion was correct."

Hydrate of Chloral.

In an article reviewing the evidence which from time to time has been brought forward for and against the use of hydrate of chloral as a therapeutical agent, the editor of the Journal of Chemistry declares it as his opinion that it is a perfectly safe article for any intelligent physician to employ; that it produces a sound, refreshing sleep when used in cases of nervous wakefulness, leaving the brain and digestive organs in a perfectly normal condition; that there is no organ or function of the system disturbed by it, even when its use is long continued; and that it has the singular property of not losing its therapeutical influence when persistently employed—the same dose given to the same patient, for a period of nearly three years, having invariably produced the same refreshing sleep, each night. The editor of the Journal asserts, however, that it is useless and improper to give the agent to relieve pain—it being only valuable as a hypnotic in sleeplessness unattended by pain—and that the dose employed by many physicians is insufficient; ten grains have usually but little influence upon an adult, twenty often fail to produce sleep, but thirty or forty seldom fail—medium doses being better at first, to be repeated as required.

The Length of Whales.

Mr. Scoresby, a very high authority on this subject, declares that the common whale seldom exceeds seventy feet in length, and is much more frequently under sixty. Out of three hundred and twenty-two whales which he assisted in capturing, not one exceeded fifty-eight feet, and the largest of which he knew the reported measurement to be authentic came up to sixty-seven feet. Two specimens of the rorqual or razor-back whale have been observed to be one hundred and five feet in length. One of these was found floating lifeless in Davis Straits, and the skeleton of the other was seen in Columbia river, and must, tail and all, when alive, have measured one hundred and twelve feet. Other specimens have measured a hundred, and many others from eighty to ninety feet. One cast on shore at North Berwick, Scotland, and preserved by Dr. Knox, was eighty-three feet in length. These instances seem to establish the average and extreme length of these animals. But, with considerable credulity, in earlier accounts, Cuvier, the eminent naturalist, says stoutly, "There is no doubt that whales have been seen at certain epochs and in certain seas upward of three hundred feet long, or one hundred yards in length."

The Coming Girl.

She will be of some use in the world, will cook her own food, will earn a living, and will not die an old maid. The coming girl will not wear the Grecian bend, dance the German, ignore all possibilities of knowing how to work, will not endeavor to break the hearts of unsophisticated young men, will spell correctly, understand English before she affects French, will preside with equal grace at the piano and the washboard, will spin more yarn for the house than the street, will not despise her plainly-clad mother, her poor relations, or the hand of an honest worker, will wear a bonnet, speak good, plain English, will darn her old stockings, will know how to make doughnuts.

The coming girl will walk five miles a day, if need be, to keep her cheeks in glow; will mind her health, her physical development, and her mother; will adopt a costume both sensible and conducive to comfort and health; will not confound hypocrisy with politeness; will not place lying to please instead of frankness; will have the courage to cut an unwelcome acquaintance; will not think that refinement is French duplicity, that assumed hospitality where hate dwells in the heart is better than outspoken condemnation; will not confound grace of movement with silly affectation; will not regard the end of her very being to have a beau.

The Snow-Flower.

A very remarkable account is admitted into Les Mondes of a so-called snow-flower, said to have been discovered by Count Anthoskoff in 1863, in the northernmost portion of Siberia, where the earth is continually covered with a coating of frost. This wonderful object shoots forth from the frozen soil the first day of the year, and then returns to its original elements. It shines for a single day, then the stem, leaves and flower are converted into snow. The leaves are three in number, and about three inches in diameter, covered with a kind of microscopic ice, developed only on that side of the stem which is directed to the north. The flower, when open, is star-shaped, its petals of the same length with the leaves, and about half an inch wide. On the third day the extremities of the anthers, which are five in number, show minute, glistening specks, like diamonds, about the size of a pin's head, which are the seeds of this astonishing flower.

Count Anthoskoff collected some of these seeds and hastened with them to St. Petersburgh. They were there placed in a pot of snow, where they remained for an entire year; but on the 1st of January, 1864, the snow-flower burst through its icy envelope, and displayed its beauties before the eyes of the imperial court.

Cultivate Purity of Language.

Avoid slang, my dear girls, as you would avoid any degrading habit; let your words be pure, simple and expressive—just such a form of expression as your little brother and sister may imitate. Never forget that next to "mother," elder sisters are the chief educators of the household. It is painful to listen to many girls' talk. They begin with a "My goodness!" and interlard it with "oh's!" and "sakes alive!" and "so sweet!" and "so queenly!" and so many silly phrases that one is tempted to believe they have had no training at all, or else their mothers were very foolish women. There is nothing more disgusting than the twaddle of ill-bred girls; one is provoked often into taking up a paper and reading, and letting them ripple and gurgle on, like brooks that flow they know not whither. My heart warms with love for sensible girls and pure boys; and after all, if our girls and boys are not this, I fear it is our fault that this great trust rests in the heart and hands of the women of our land. If we have a noble, useful purpose in life, we will infuse the right spirit into those around us.

American Labor.

Canon Fremantle, in a recent lecture in London on America, said that no American will enter into domestic service. If that were right it would be equally wrong to keep a servant. But the same people who regard domestic service as a degradation have no scruples against employing Irish or German servants. The Canon thought there was a truer feeling in England, where the most honorable relations are often found to exist between master and servant. The Canon, however, said he would leave it to his hearers whether the excessive independence of the American or the dependence of the English workman was preferable. At a station in Boston he found it impossible to get any one to carry his luggage to another station three hundred yards off, and had to do it himself, though, as there were several boxes, he would gladly have paid. When he arrived at Euston station, London, two fine fellows ran by the side of his cab all the way to Gloucester Plain—over a mile—for the chance of earning sixpence for carrying in the luggage. Which, he asked, is the better state of things—that in which you cannot get a man to work for you, or that in which human toil is so cheap and so little accounted of?

A Patent Rat-Trap.

The local editor of the Burlington (Ia.) Hawkeye says a man has invented a patent rat-trap that does not require any bait, and will fetch a rat every time it reaches for him. It operates on the principle of a stomach-pump—the inventor is a "retired physician, the souls of whose life have nearly," etc.—and the trap is placed at the mouth of the rat-hole. When it is wound up and the suction begins the rat comes. He may hold on to the ground with his teeth, and hump his back and paw dirt, and weep, and yell for the police all he wants, he comes out of that hole backwards, is dragged into a back compartment, where a steel glove drags his hide off and lays it aside for a kid glove manufacturer, while the carcass is pushed into a little furnace and incremated.

BROTHERLY love is not the only kind they cultivate in Philadelphia. For 15,782 fond hearts were made to beat as 7,891 in that city last year.

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

To Preserve Fowls' Wings.—Rub the fleshy part thoroughly with a mixture of salt, pepper and alum, and hang in a cool place till it is thoroughly impregnated with the salt, then put it to press under a heavy weight.

Union Cake.—Two cups of sugar, one cup of butter, one cup of milk, three cups of flour, one-half cup of corn starch, four eggs, one teaspoonful of cream of tarar, one-half teaspoonful of soda, two teaspoonfuls of extract of lemon, and one teasponful of brandy.

To Remove the Iron Taste from New Kettles.—Boil a handful of hay in them, and repeat the process if necessary. Hay water is a great sweetener of tin, iron and wooden-ware. In Irish dairies everything used for milk is scalded with hay water.

To Boil a Ham.—If dry, soak it over night. In the morning put it in warm water, and boil slowly five or six hours. Remove from the fire and let the liquor get cold before the ham is taken from it. Then remove the skin and grate toasted bread over the ham. Keep the skin as whole as possible and cover the ham with it when it is taken from the table.

Common Fruit Cake.—Two eggs, one cup of sugar (brown is best), one-half cup of molasses, one-half cup of butter, one-half cup of sweet milk, two cups of flour, one cup of raisins, two teaspoonfuls of cream of tartar, and teaspoonful of soda, two teaspoonfuls of cinnamon, one teaspoonful each of cloves and allspice and nutmeg. If I have it I add a tablespoonful of sour cream.

Remedy for Cuts and Abrasions of the Skin.—Take a live coal, pulverize it, apply to to the wound, and cover the whole with a rag. The charcoal absorbs all the secretions, and is antiseptic. Quinine in powder may be used instead, as it possesses most of the virtues of pulverized charcoal, and is besidé astringent and tonic, and gives a white scab instead of a black one.

Clover and Gypsum.—George Geddes writes to the New York Tribune that he has on his farm, in Central New York, a field which from 1799 to 1873 has had no manure except clover grown on it and plowed under, and that wheat, corn, oats, barley, meadow and pasture have been regularly taken from the land in five years rotation—the closing crop being winter wheat with which timothy and clover is sowed. The clover has been regularly treated with gypsum for fifty years. He has particularly noticed it of late years and says the land is more fertile than 23 years ago.

A Potato Sowing-Machine.—The Journal d'Agriculture Pratique states that among the new machines which especially attracted the attention of agriculturists at the recent meeting of the Palais de l'Industrie was a potato-sowing machine, invented by M. Couteau, and constructed by M. Peltier, Jr. By means of an ingenious contrivance, worked by a gear, the tubers, previously placed in box are carried successfully into a pipe which opens and shuts automatically, depositing the seed with perfect regularity in the furrows made by a share with which the machine is provided.

Soil and Crops.—According to my experience and observation, some farmers fail in not planting the right crops in the soil best adapted to their culture. The successful farmer plants corn and sows oats on his moist ground, but potatoes do best on light soil, and on soil so dry that water will not stand at any time. Wheat does best on high, hard wood land; barley will grow well upon a light or sandy soil, and yield best on clayey or gravelly soil; newly broken up ground is best. Rutabagas, beets, parsnips and carrots need a light deep soil. Apples, pomegranates and cherry trees thrive planted in hard, rocky soil. Land that is too rocky to plow is good for orchards.

Closing Cracks in Stoves.—It may be convenient to know a ready method of closing up cracks, which are not uncommon in cast-iron stoves, and we are assured that the following receipt is a reliable one. Good wood ashes are to be sifted through a fine sieve, to which is to be added the same quantity of clay finely pulverized together with a little salt. The mixture is to be moistened with water enough to make a paste, and the crack of the stove filled with it. The cement does not peel off or break away, and assumes an extreme degree of hardness after being heated. The stove must be cool when the application is made. The same substance may be used in setting in the plates of a stove, or in fitting stove-pipes, serving to render all the joints perfectly tight.

Sod as Manure.—Geo. Geddes, in the Country Gentleman, writes: As a manure, the value of an old sod will be somewhat understood when we consider the result obtained by Prof. Kedzie of the Michigan Agricultural College at Lansing. He took a square foot of June-grass turf and washed away all the soil in running water, and then weighed the roots and surface grass, to determine the amount of green manural matter usually contained in a heavy greensward, and found it to be five pounds to the square foot—or at the rate of more than 100 tons to the acre. This was from a very heavy mat of June grass, and the Professor says in a letter to me, in regard to this matter: "This is doubtless in excess of ordinary June grass"—but he says he "thinks that few farmers estimate correctly the amount of vegetable matter they add to their soil by plowing under heavy greensward."

Choosing Eggs for Hatching.—Eggs for hatching should be chosen of the fair average size usually laid from the hen they are from; any unusually large or small being rejected. Some hens lay immensely large eggs and others small ones. A fat hen will always lay small eggs, which can only produce small and weakly chickens. Absolute size in eggs is, therefore, of but little importance. Round, short eggs are usually the best to select; very long eggs, especially if much pointed at the small end, almost always breed birds with some awkwardness in style or carriage. Neither should rough, small eggs be chosen, for they usually show some derangement of the organs and are often sterile. Smooth-shelled eggs alone are proper for hatching. It is a farce to suppose that the sex of a bird can be determined by the shape of the egg.

To Keep Hams in Summer.—The Germantown Telegraph says: There are a number of modes given to keep hams through the warm season free from the attacks of insects. Some bag them and whitewash the bags, which is troublesome and somewhat expensive; some cover them with dry wood-ashes and pack them in barrels; some pack them in barrels and cover thoroughly with pine-shavings; but we think the best plan of all, and certainly the least expensive with all who have a smoke-house—and every farmer should have a good one—is to keep the hams hung up in the smoke-house which should be kept perfectly dark at all times. We have eaten hams so kept two years old, and they were among the very best we ever tasted. Uniform darkness is a complete protection against the attack of insects.

Potato-Growing.—A Massachusetts farmer writes: To prepare for a crop of potatoes, I turn over in July a piece of greensward, after taking off a crop of hay. Then apply a liberal dressing of barnyard manure, which is worked thoroughly into the soil by a pair of horses and a Share's harrow. After getting it fine, mellow and smooth, sow to Hungarian grass, which yields two or more tons of good fodder per acre. The next spring, after applying about five cords of strong barn-cellar manure made from cattle which are liberally fed on good hay and grain, the land is again plowed, cross-plowed and harrowed till it is in the very best condition for growing a crop of potatoes, the old sward being now entirely rotten.

How to Make Good Coffee.—I have traveled some. And it is seldom that I find coffee fit to drink, especially at the hotels. It comes to us pretty near cold, often full of coffee grounds of a dirty, black color; very often it is not deserving the name of coffee. All the cream and sugar you can put in it does not make it palatable. It is no more trouble to make good coffee than poor. First wash the coffee clean, then dry it, then brown it—not burn it. The hopper-ful of our common coffee-mills is about enough for eight or ten persons, according to the strength the persons' want.

Put the ground coffee in a bowl or the coffee-boiler, add half an egg, then pour on just enough cold water to wet the coffee by being well stirred; then pour on enough boiling water to suit the strength wanted, boil from five to ten minutes, set off the fire and add about half a gill of cold water; let stand one minute to settle and pour off in another coffee-pot. Now serve; then you will have coffee of a light amber color, without grounds, fit for any one to drink.—Exchange.

Virtue of Tar Water.

Bishop Berkeley published a work on "The Virtues of Tar Water," and later in life, just before his death, he published a sequel, entitled, "Further Thoughts on Tar Water." The common way of making it was to put a quart of tar into a gallon of water, stir it thoroughly, let it stand forty-eight hours, then pour off the water. A half-pint in the morning, on rising, and a half-pint on going to bed, was the common dose. In those days it was almost as common to call for a glass of tar water in a coffee house as a dish of tea or coffee. It was not only regarded as a sovereign remedy for many grave diseases among men, but was much used in treating the diseases of horses and cattle. "I never knew," said Bishop Berkeley, "anything so good for the stomach as tar water; it cures indigestion, and gives a good appetite. It is excellent medicine in an asthma. It imparts a kindly warmth and quick circulation to the juices, without heating, and is, therefore, useful not only as a pectoral and balsamic, but also as a powerful and safe deobstruent in the cachetic and hysteric cases. As it is both heating and diuretic, it is very good for the gravel. I believe it is to be of great use in a dropsy, having known it to cure a very bad anasarca in a person whose thirst, though very extraordinary, was in a short time removed by the drinking of tar water." The bishop published his great work, "Siris; or a Chain of Philosophical Reflections and Inquiries Concerning the Virtues of Tar Water," in the year 1774. Notwithstanding the opposition and ridicule of physicians, philosophers and men of science, tar water had an enormous success.

Home.

We assert, as a rule, the whole tone of a home depends upon the woman at the head of it—the average home; not the poverty-stricken home, nor the wealthy home. In this average home, whether sunshine shall enter the rooms, whether the table shall be invitingly spread, whether bright lights and bright fires shall give warmth and cheer on winter nights—whether, in brief, the home shall be an agreeable or a disagreeable place, is usually what the woman determines. Men are powerless in the matter. Some find solace for a dismal home in study, some occupation in business; some submit with what patience they can; others are attracted by the cheer of the public house and it is especially young men who are apt, in consequence, to drift into bad company and bad habits. There are men—and men. Our whole argument refers to individuals among men who succumb to bad influences—not the sex, but a class. —Appleton's Journal

No More Trouble with Canada Thistles.—Some of our readers who have struggled with the Canada thistle demon till they have been almost driven to despair, may be inclined to doubt the efficacy of a plan which "W. H. G." communicates from Manitowoc, Wis. He says there is a man there who can kill them by a charm, and, furthermore, adds, it "is true, for he has advertised it and warrants his process." Some may be inclined to try charming; some are in favor of nitro-glycerine.

Here is a hint to railway officers: The conductor of cars in Constantinople gives to every passenger a prize ticket, bearing a number, which is recorded on the company's books. A drawing takes place monthly, the company having provided a certain number of prizes. The hope of drawing a prize makes the passenger anxious to send in his ticket, and if the returns of the conductor are not equal to the number of returned tickets, his dishonesty is easily detected, and he is at once discharged.

An individual aged about 30 years, whose name it is not worth while to mention, mistook a lady on School street yesterday evening for an acquaintance of his, and followed her into the Parker House. Not succeeding in attracting her attention, and spying a pocket-handkerchief protruding from her pocket, he approached her carelessly, and drew the fabric from her pocket and passed out of the parlor. This was observed by the lady and gentleman in her company, and the joker, not being recognized by the lady, was regarded as a pickpocket, and then and there detained until an officer was brought in. The joker told his story and looked cheap; was taken to the Second Station, where he told his story and looked cheaper. The handkerchief was restored, and, as no one cared to prosecute, the joker went home.—Boston Journal.

Aniline Colors.—Prof. Kopp, who had recently made a careful study of the aniline colors at the Vienna Exposition, says that the manufacture of these pigments from coal tar products is making most remarkable progress. Fuchsin, constituted by a salt of rosaniline, is obtained exclusively by the reaction of arsenic acid on commercial aniline. In order to afford an idea of the enormous consumption of this violent poison in the manufacture of fuchsin, it is stated that in Germany alone the same is estimated at 3,300,000 pounds a year. It is only lately that the residues have been treated to regain the arsenic in commercial form. M. Kopp mentions, as a novelty, a beautiful rose-red coloring matter called saffronine, which upon silk, is a very brilliant dye.

ANTI-MONOPOLY.

The Real Issue Involved in the Farmers' Movement.

[By Charles W. Greene, Editor of the National Crop Reporter.]

During the past two years the people of the United States have been agitated as never before. From the St. Lawrence to the Gulf, and all the way across the continent, we hear of a strange commotion, involving all the humbler classes, and commanding the attention of those in the higher walks of life—as we have become accustomed to rank the professionals and the favored ones of wealth. The word has gone forth that the people must organize, and the command has beeen acceded to without question as to its origin. It would indeed be difficult, perhaps impossible, to determine how, when, or where this idea possessed the people, so that they were already, as by one accord, to join hands and hearts, to touch shoulder to shoulder, for the advancement of the general welfare. That they were so possessed is clearly evidenced by the spontaneous response to the first calls made for general conventions. These conventions were called in the South, in the West, in the East, and in the heart of the country. Who called them, and the immediate occasion therefor, is a matter of so little moment that it has hardly become matter of record. It would be difficult to establish precedence in this regard for any locality or for any individual. Nor is it necessary to do so. The movement is an advancing one. The past is left behind, and every thought is cast ahead—to accomplish what? I have said for the advancement of the general welfare. The term is a vague one, but it probably conveys as definite an idea as it is possible to express now. The work to be done has not yet been clearly defined.

* * * * * *

It is not the farmers alone who are zealously gathering in the workers, but mechanics and artisans and laborers are enrolling themselves for the contest. The questions are now pressing for answer, what is to be done? Where are our antagonists?

We are here a million strong, ready and waiting: what great work are we expected to perform? The time has arrived when the answer must by given. Where the movement first started we already see manifestations of impatience. Much money and more time has been devoted to the work of organizing, and the results are not sufficiently apparent to satisfy the lukewarm and doubting ones. While, I may not present to you any definite plans for further action, it will certainly not be amiss if I review some of the causes which have contributed to the present conditions. Perchance such a view will suggest to your minds the practical answer to the questions so anxiously propounded.

I repeat, to give it greater emphasis, that it may safely be said that the opposition to monopoly, in its present contracted sense, was an after-thought, and that it had no part as a definite durpose in promoting the earlier action. Indeed, the impulse was not an independent one, nor of recent origin. This present condition of the public mind has been reached by a process of slow development. It is one of the successive stages in our national life in conformity to the arbitary law of evolution.

Mr. Schurz, in his eloquent tribute to the memory of Charles Sumner, referring to the character and public services of Webster and Clay, says: "Such men filled the stage during that period of construction and conservative national organization, devoting the best efforts of their statesmanship, the statesmanship of the political mind, to the purpose of raising their country to greatness in wealth and power, of making the people proud of of their nationality, and of imbedding the Union in the contentment of prosperity in enlightening patriotism, national law, and constitutional prosperity. And when they drew near their end they could boast of many a grand achievement, not indeed exclusively their own, for other powerful minds had their share in the work. The United States stood then among the great powers of the earth, strong and respected. The Republic had no foreign foe to fear, its growth in population and wealth, in popular intelligence and progressive civilization, the wonder of the world. There was no visible limit to its developement; there seems to be no danger to its integrity." It was just as these men stepped from the public stage that Sumner appeared upon it, the embodiment of the moral ideas which form the only true basis of national unity. Through his unflinching integrity and his intelligent and undomitable perseverance in the work which devolved upon him, after a long protracted struggle, ending in a sanguinary fratricidal conflict, the nation has been liberated from the blighting incubus of human slavery.

But we are not yet free. Human government has not yet attained perfection. Scarcely have we overcome one stupendous evil ere another has reared its hydra head—one of a more threatening aspect than its predecessor, one which pervades every locality.

The aristocracy of concentrated—wealth, which quietly assumes to usurp the prerogatives of government, and steadily undermines the virtue of the public servants, is more to be feared than was the slavocracy of the South. It is far more threatening to the integrity of our free government. Its deeds are of darkness. Its works are secret, and because that they are so, multiplies their power for evil a hundred-fold.

In the infancy of the Republic, the wealth-holders, having mostly espoused the Tory cause in the Revolution, excited no undue influence in the conduct of public affairs. Neither had the principle of associated capital been developed; but as the country waxed strong and vigorous, as it expanded its inhabited area and filled its boundaries with the people and wealth of other lands, new fields were opened to enterprising wealth-seekers, and the opportunities were not disregarded. The desire for wealth has no practical limit in the human mind. A little stimulates the appetite for more. It increases in a geometrical ratio, and, after a certain stage of accumulation, the ability to hoard is greatly augmented. Persistent money-making and hoarding develops a selfishness which in turn leads naturally to unscrupulous and dishonest dealing.

The very labors of Clay and Webster, and their compeers, contributed directly to the growth of this money-power. In their laudable efforts to strengthen the Republic and augment its wealth, they devised measures which overshot the mark at which they aimed.

Systems of subsidy privileges were conceived and arranged to promote enterprises of a combined public and private character. To those who ventured private capital, extraordinary grants of special power were extended, and just here was the beginning of our present woes. That the representatives of the people acted in accord with the demand of their constituencies, cannot be questioned. For many years the corporations were weak. They were composed of many individuals, each holding a comparatively small interest. The grants of privileges were most liberally construed by the courts, in accordance with the demand of public sentiment. The people themselves are clearly responsible for the wrong as well as for the good features of such legislation.

In the course of time the conditions changed. Prosperity was vouchsafed to the corporations as a result of honest management and the natural growth of the business which the construction of the railways stimulated. They were no longer weak and needing assistance. Their capacity as wealth-earners was clearly demonstrated. Had the policy been changed at this time it would have been well. It may well be, and is, within the province and duty of the General Government to demonstrate the utility of such enterprises as will promote the general prosperity, but it is questionable whether partnerships in so doing are admissible. So soon as success was assured, designing men sought and obtained control of the successful corporations, and from that moment they became aggressive, seeking personal advancement regardless of the public good.

Not content with what had been given, they greedily asked for more, and could afford to offer inducements which secured almost to the full extent of the asking. To secure the favor of the official representatives of the people toward any new enterprise was equivalent, and is yet in many localities, to obtaining the full limit of their demands. It was only natural that they should so extend those limits that an amount was provided sufficient to secure the favor which was so potent. Such offices, under these circumstances, were a tempting prize. It mattered little what the ordinary salary and emoluments of the office might be. By proper management it was possible to make the perquisites the chief inducement.

Office-seeking, which, under the ordinary rules of etiquette, would be unbecoming to gentlemen, gradually grew into general favor, and has become now almost inseparable from the political system. Party management has been constrained to recognize it and to conform to its requirements. In fact, it is now the chief element in party organization and the people have become accustomed to rate the offices in importance, not according to the stipulated salaries, but to the amount which may be realized by "good management" or from the opportunities for honorable stealing. Since 1860, and especially during the years of the rebellion, the opportunities for plunder and the forced forbearance of the people in the presence of threatened disaster contributed to and hastened the demoralization which had previously commenced.

I have glanced thus hastily at the remote causes which have led to the present lamentable condition of our political system. A virulent poison has permeated every artery and vein, and the life of the nation is in [illegible] danger. It is this diseased condition of the body politic which has compelled the attention of the people. It is this which accounts for the wide-spread, universal interest which has inaugurated and pressed forward the farmers' movement. Its damning effects are everywhere apparent. Wherever legislative bodies assemble, at the national, State, or county capitals, we hear the charges made of official corruption. So long as the beneficiaries of the stealings—I can use no more appropriate word—agree among themselves, there is nothing said; but, as runs the old saw, "when thieves fall out," etc. Recently the thieves have been falling out so constantly, and their charges and counter-charges are so thoroughly circulated by the press, that the people have become alarmed, as well they may. Any one who will give the subject careful thought must admit the truth of every position I have thus far advanced.

If this be so, is it not evident that any reform measures to be effective must be directed to correcting the primary sources of the evil. There must be a radically thorough change of policy, in regard to joint undertakings between the public, as represented in legislative bodies and private corporations. If the rule be made absolute, admitting no exceptions, that no subsidy shall be granted by national, State, county, or municipal authority, in money, land, or special privileges, a starting-point will certainly be gained. It needs no further demonstration that building lines of railway through agricultural or mining districts will pay the investors, even through an undeveloped country, if there be reasonable intelligence in the management, a handsome profit upon the actual money required for construction and operation. It has been fully demonstrated, too, that there are land-owners and capitalists in every district where a railroad may properly be built, who derive a large profit by such building. Let them pay the cost and they will be apt to look well to economy in the expenditure of their subscriptions.

I have used railway building as a familiar illustration of the system under which all of the public enterprises have been conducted. But it runs through all our public service. In the erection of public buildings it has been sought to spend as much money as possible in a structure of given size. The building material on the spot, which serves every necessity of private enterprise, is not good enough and a substitute must be transported from New England to New Orleans and the Western cities.

The pay of the Government laborers is generally above current rates, and the number of hours per day is reduced to the shortest limit. The chief qualification for a Government employe is a disposition to vote the dominant party ticket, and the "influence" he can exert in securing such votes. The Departments at the National Capital are crowded with supernumerary clerks, appointed to position screated for them, as a reward for service to the party. Six hours a day is the limit of their capacity for the arduous labors which they are paid from $800 to $3,000 to perform. It is time that a change should be instituted in this regard. We should demand a reduction of expenses, either by increasing the hours of labor or by reducing the pay, or both. We should demand, too, that all pay and emoluments in the public service should be a specific amount, eliminating the vicious system of perquisite fees. We should demand a reduction of expenditures upon public buildings. There is no necessity for such palatial buildings as are now being constructed in all of the principal cities for the proper conduct of the public business. We are heavily in debt. The people are overburdened with taxes. We cannot afford such extravagance. But it is not our poverty which chiefly prompts the reform. These buildings are always built by contract—fat contracts. There is jobbery and favoritism in all of them, and the demoralization resulting is far more objectionable than the expenditure of the money.

I might go on and particularize further, but it is not necessary. You all understand as well as I that there is need for reform throughout the entire governmental system. It needs a thorough remodeling. It must be purified. This is the work for which the people are organizing. * * * *

And here I have a word to say about leaders. The party papers and stump-orators are anxiously inquiring where are the leaders of this farmers' movement. They want somebody that is tangible brought forward, toward whom they can level their weapons. They dare not do it toward the people in the aggregate, because that would lose them votes. Now, if I understand the nature of this movement, it is, as previously intimated, the assertion of individuality on the part of the people. They have had enough of blindly following party leaders.

They are now proposing to lead themselves, to dictate how their officers shall conduct themselves in the performance of their assigned duties. The progress they are making in this self-leading is seen in the repeal of the Salary-Grab law—with a Presidential exception—and in the influence so directly and effectively exerted upon Congressional and State legislation. The power is so evident that the demagogues are humbling themselves upon their marrow-bones, pleading so earnestly for a little longer to serve the dear people.

A FINAL APPEAL.

In conclusion, I would appeal to all of you, as good citizens, as honest, intelligent men, to join in the great and important work before us. Until it is accomplished we shall have a babel of confusion, injuriously affecting our prosperity as individuals and as a nation. Our finances are now only disturbed by the state of uncertainty at present existing. Capital, which is sensitive, and yet which always desires employment if it is assuredly safe, is being hoarded in the East and in Europe where the surplus has accumulated. While portions of it may have been the result of questionable transactions, by far the larger is the accumulation from legitimate business and personal enterprise. No one here would justify the taking forcible possession.

Let us, now that the work is so well commenced, press it vigorously forward to the end. When the people comprehend and accept their responsibilities; when they have learned that good government is a prerequisite to national and individual prosperity; when they shall understand that the filling of county and municipal offices involves a greater responsibility than the election of a President or Congressman, as affording protection against corruption, then may we rest secure in the perpetuity of Republican Government; then shall we enjoy a freedom never before experienced; then will prosperity abound in all of the land. We shall have more money and better money. Official corruption, monopoly oppressions, ring combinations and demagoguery will be known only as of the past. The people of our whole country may dwell together in unity and harmony. Sectional bickering will give place to common-sense concessions, and the people of the United States, representing every nationality under the sun, will press onward and upward to a more complete development of progressive American civilization.

PRAYED HIM OUT.

The shutters are up at the windows; the bolt is turned now in the door
Of the groggery on the corner that few have seen closed before;
For the women came from their dwellings and gathered the shop about,
And Tom slid out at the back-door, for the women soon prayed him out.

We're arrested that fellow, and fined him, more times than I've fingers and toes,
But we never could stop for a moment his fountain of human woes;
With the money he made on his whisky he could well afford to pay;
But he didn't know how to meet the foe that came to his bar to pray.

We've tried on him moral suasion; we've pictured the ruin wrought
In the peaceful homes of our village; but our labor has been for naught;
"Somebody will sell if I don't," was his time-worn rock of defense
Against our strongest argument—our volleys of common sense.

Tom Murphy could stand the pressure when one woman came alone,
To pray and weep in his bar-room—to plead with his heart of stone;
But when they came down in battalions and knelt on his bar-room floor,
The [illegible] turned the bolt in the door.

Tom Murphy has bribed our judges—has bought all our juries, too;
Our single prayers and entreaties he stubbornly waded through;
But the giant of Castle Ruin has fled from his world away,
For he couldn't buy off the women who knelt on his floor to pray.

Don't quibble about who did it; enough that the work is done;
And mothers shall seek at Murphy's no more for a ruined son;
The lawyers, and moral suasion, may be able some foes to rout,
But give me the praying women who prayed Tom Murphy out.

How natural it is for man when he makes a mistake to korrect it by kussing somebody else for it.—Josh Billings.

Woman is like ivy—the more you are ruined the closer she clings to you. An old bachelor adds: "Ivy is like woman—the closer it sticks to you the more you are ruined."

A man from Placerville, Cal., when asked by a Saratoga waiter what he would have for breakfast, replied: "Well, I rather guess I'll just flop my lip over a chicken."

The "elements" of a quarrel—Irate party to 'bus driver: "Why don't you attend to my hail?" 'Bus driver, with dignity and a "pulling team," "'Cause I had my hands full of rein."

Och! said a love-sick Hibernian, what a recreation it is to be dying of love! It sets the heart aching so delicately there's no taking a wink of sleep for the pleasure of the pain.

It was an unfortunate idea, making the new ten-cent scrip so much like the fifty-cent scrip. It is no pleasant sensation, after hurrying home from a store, and all the way being under the impression that you have beaten somebody out of forty cents, to find that you have the right change, after all.

William M. Evarts, in a recent speech at the Lotus Club, told of a Yankee schoolmaster who undertook to make compulsory poets of his scholars, and was obliged to listen to this effusion of one of them:

Oh, hopeful Jove, lend us thine aid,
To help us wretched scholars;
We've hired a fool to teach this school,
And pay him fifty dollars.

"Nothing," said an impatient husband, "reminds me so much of Balaam and his ass as two women stopping in church and obstructing the way, to indulge in their everlasting talk." "But you forget, my dear," returned the wife, meekly, "that it was the angel who stopped the way, and Balaam and his ass who complained of it."

A little fellow the other day was endeavoring to excite a playmate's admiration for his older sister's beauty. "Isn't she handsome?" he asked. "Yes, pretty handsome." "But isn't she very handsome?" "Well, some very," which is a distinction as is a distinction. Such a nicety of discrimination in the over-tutored mind of youth could only have found expression in the "Hub."—New York World.

A Baltimore woman a few days ago took to the Register of Wills in that city a will made by her husband, which she desired to file for probate. "When did he die?" inquired the sympathetic clerk. "Why, bless you," responded the woman, "he an't dead yet, but he gave me that [pointing to the will], and he drinks a quart of liquor every day, and I guess," continued she with a laugh, "he'll play out in about three months." The officer had no more to say, but filed away the will.

An old farmer employed a son of Erin to work for him on his farm. Pat was constantly misplacing the endboards in the cart—the front board behind, and the tail board in front, which made the old gentleman very irritable. To prevent it, he painted on both boards a large "B;" then calling Pat to him, and showing him the boards, said: "Now, you blockhead, you need make no mistake, as they are now both marked. This (pointing to one board) is "B" for before, and that, indicating the tail board, is "B" for behind, whereupon the old gentleman marched off with great dignity.

Sons and Daughters.—Confide in your parents. Make them above all others, your confidants. They are the best and most disinterested friends you will ever have in this world. It is natural for you to think they do not and cannot, from the position of things, know much, at least very much, about your affairs, and that therefore you cannot talk confidentially with them. Do not, however, yield to any such impression. Cultivate rather the habit of consultation with them. On things great and small seek their advice. A daughter will never come to shame, a son never to dishonor, that does so.

MANHOOD:
HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED!

Just published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the Radical cure [without medicine] of SPERMATORRHŒA or Seminal Weakness Involuntary Seminal Losses, IMPOTENCY, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc.; also, CONSUMPTION, EPILEPSY and FITS, induced by self indulgence or sexual extravagance; Piles, &c.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only six cents.

The celebrated author in this admirable essay, clearly demonstrates from a thirty years successful practice, that the alarming consequences of self abuse may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a road of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

Sent under seal in a plain envelope, to any address post-paid, on the receipt of six cents, or two post stamps. Also, DR. SILSBEE'S REMEDY FOR PILES. Send for circular.

LUKE HARDING, THE SCOUT;

OR

The Lost Bride of Huron.

BY ARTHUR L. MESERVE.

CHAPTER I.

THE MISSING MAIDEN.

Reuben, where can Martha be? She ought to have been home an hour ago. I wish the child wouldn't wander off into the forest as she does. I don't take a minutes peace while she is gone. The woods are full of redskins, and there is no telling what may happen to her.'

It was Ruth Allen who uttered these words, as she stood in the door of her cabin, which commanded a view of the widespreading waters of the Huron, which were gleaming like a great sheet of gold in the light of the setting sun. They were addressed to her husband, who stood leaning on his rifle, just outside the door, where he had paused before entering, after a day's tramp in the woods. His wife had met him there with an anxious look upon her face, the reason for which was declared by her words.

'I don't think the redskins would do her any harm, Ruth,' answered the settler, 'You can't expect to keep her in the house all the time. She likes a tramp in the forest as well as I do. If she had been a boy, she would have been one of the best hunters there is on the border. She is a good deal better shot now, than a good many I know of who pride themselves on what they can do with the rifle. Don't worry Ruth. She is able to take care of herself. There are some of the redskins who like her as well as tho' she belonged to their own race. They would not harm her for their life.'

'There is one of them, Reuben, who likes her altogether too well, and that is one reason for my worrying. The last time he was here, I am sure there was a look upon his face when Martha laughed at him, which meant her no good.'

Reuben Allen smiled at these words of his wife.

'You mean the young chief, Red Cloud. I have thought myself that he was in love with her, but I guess there ain't any danger of her marrying him so long as Hugh Lyman is around. Hugh ain't back from his hunt, for I called at the cabin as I came along. When he does come, I guess you will find that Martha is with him.'

'I hope she may be. I can't help worrying about the child when she is off in this way. She takes after you, Reuben. She had rather be in the woods, I do believe, than anywhere else.'

'Well, I don't blame her. There is fun there. But as you say, Ruth, she ought not to venture too far alone. When she comes back I will give her a talking to, myself.'

'And a great deal it will amount to, Reuben. I know just how it will end. It will wind up by telling her to go as often and stay as long as she likes.'

'I guess I don't humor her any more than you do, Ruth. You know you can't make up your mind to scold her, no matter what she may do.'

Mrs. Allen made no answer to this; but she kept her gaze fixed with an anxious look away in the direction from which she expected Martha to appear.

For the next few minutes there was a silence between them. The sun sank low down behind the tree tops, and its golden light was forsaking the waters of the lake, and flashing upwards to rest on the fleecy clouds that floated above it. A little longer and the shadows of night would begin to gather over the lake and wood, cabin and clearing. Suddenly Mrs. Allen exclaimed:

'Here comes Hugh, Reuben; and Martha is not with him!'

It was indeed as she said. The young hunter, Hugh Lyman, with his rifle over his shoulder, was approaching, and alone. Martha was not with him nor were there any signs of her coming about the clearing.

A shade of disquiet passed over and lingered upon the face of Reuben Allen. It certainly was past the time that Martha should be back. Was it possible that his wife's fears might be well-founded, and that some harm had come to her? He would not believe it yet, for the savages had always evinced a friendly spirit towards him and his.

Hugh Lyman approached the cabin and as he came near, his eyes wandered about as though he was in search of one of its inmates who was not yet visible.

'Have you seen anything of Martha?' demanded Mrs. Allen, speaking before the young man had even a chance to salute them.

'No,' he answered, with a start. 'Is she not here? When did you see her last?'

'She went into the forest this afternoon, saying she would be back in an hour or two. She has not come yet, and I am afraid that some harm has come to her.'

The anxious look which had come so suddenly upon the face of the young man, deepened at this.

'I don't see where she can be,' he said. 'I came along by the places where I knew she is apt to go, but saw nothing of her. Surely she could not have gone in her accustomed direction.'

'She went the usual way,' answered Mrs. Allen. 'Reuben, I have felt all the afternoon that something was wrong. I tell you, some harm has come to Martha.'

'Here comes Will Kingman,' exclaimed the settler. 'He has been in the woods to-day, and it may be that he brings some news. He seems in haste about something.'

So swift were the strides of the newcomer that in a very few moments he stood by the side of those who were watching for his approach.

'Martha! she is not here? were the first words he said, as he glanced inquiringly about him.

'No; do you know aught of her?' demanded Hugh Lyman, before the others could speak.

'Yes. The redskins have carried her off'

A cry of Anguish burst from the lips of Mrs. Allen.

'How do you know this? What have you seen?' demanded the settler.

'As I was passing along near the shore of the lake, about two miles from here, something like an hour ago I heard the cry of a woman in the direction of the water. I thought I recognized Martha's voice, and I hurried as fast as I could towards the shore. When I got there I saw a canoe far out upon the lake, and in it I could see that there was a woman and three or four savages. They were going at a swift rate through the water, and of course I was powerless to do anything. I stood and watched the canoe for awhile, but no other sound came from it. Then I started for home along the shore, and in a little time I came to a spot where there were the footprints of savages upon the sand, and mingled with them those of a woman. Half covered in the sand I found this. Is it Martha's?'

He held up as he spoke a piece of ribbon, torn and soiled.

'Yes, it is Martha's. O Reuben, our child is lost to us!' cried Mrs. Allen, in tones of anguish, as she looked up with a white face into that of her husband.

CHAPTER II.

LUKE HARDING, THE SCOUT.

'No, she is not lost to you,' cried Hugh Lyman. 'If it is in the power of man to do it, we will find her and bring her back. There is not a man in the settlement but what will join us in the search. Keep up a good heart Mrs. Allen, and all may yet be well. You shall have her again, and the redskins shall be punished for what they have done. I wish Luke Harding was here. He would be worth half a dozen of us in this case.'

'But I have not seen him for days,' said Reuben Allen. 'Almost all his time is spent in the forest, and to find him now would be next to impossible. We have got only ourselves to depend upon.'

'And that is enough,' said Hugh. 'It will be a pity if the crew I can muster will not find her and bring her back.'

'Alas! you know not where they may have taken her,' said Mrs. Allen. They were on the lake when Will Kingman saw them, and how can you track them on the water? And there is no telling to what hiding place they may carry her. Oh my child! I fear I may never see you again!'

'We will find her,' cried Hugh Lyman. 'Will,' he said, turning to the new comer, 'you have, I suppose, no idea what savages they were who were in the canoe?'

'No; but stop, perhaps I have a clue. As I went into the forest I saw Red Cloud hurrying about the edge of the The clearing. You don't suppose that he may have a hand in the matter?'

'Yes, I am sure of it,' cried Mrs. Allen. 'He has been, in his way, a sort of lover of Martha's, although she has always laughed in his face.' I feel sure it is him who has stolen her away.'

'I am not sure but what you are right,' said Hugh Lyman. 'Martha told me the other day that he used some muttered threats against her. The villain! Let me but meet him, and he shall pay dearly for this afternoon's work. I think I know pretty near the spot where he would be likely to take her. I will pick up a crew and man the boat, and be off for the place at once. There is no time to be lost.'

'I will go with you,' said Reuben Allen. 'Ruth, do you remain here and bear the suspense as best you can. We won't come back until we bring Martha with us. I don't think that Red Cloud will do her any injury at present. If he does, our vengeance on him will be terrible.'

'Go Reuben. Go Hugh. It will seem an age to me before you will be back. If you do not bring her, my heart will be broken'

'Be of good cheer, wife, we will do what we can,' and imprinting a kiss upon her pale cheek, the husband and father hurried down to the shore whither the young men had already preceded him, giving the alarm to the rest of the settlers as they went.

A large boat which was owned jointly by the settler, was lying there, and in a few moments, more than enough had volunteered to go than was required to man it. The crew being selected, they pushed off, and those on the shore watched its departure until the fast increasing darkness, hid it from their sight.

By common consent Hugh Lyman took the lead of the party. He knew something of the haunts of Red Cloud and his warriors, and he was in hopes in them to find trace of her they sought. But it was a long way thereto, and he knew that the short summer night would be spent before they would arrive there.

And this proved to be the case. The night had gone, and the light of early morning had begun to dawn, before they turned the prow of the boat in towards the shore.

When some quarter of a mile distant therefrom, the light of a campfire gleamed full and wan through the early morning light, and gave them hopes that those whom they sought were gathered about it. But as they drew nearer, they found that in this they were mistaken.

A solitary figure stood beside it, with his hands resting upon his rifle. He made no motion as they drew nearer, but apparently kept his eyes fixed upon them, watching closely their every movement.

Suddenly Hugh Lyman who was standing in the prow of the boat exclaimed, as he pointed towards the shore, and the figure standing so motionlessly there.

'It is Luke Harding! We have got some one to help us now, who is a host in himself. The scout is more than a match for any savage that ever lived.'

'This is lucky indeed,' said Reuben Allen. 'Next to finding Martha herself nothing could be better. If any man can help us in our search it is him who is standing there. Pull boys and let us get to him as soon as we can.'

They did pull with a will, and in a few moments the prow of the boat grated upon the sand close to the spot where the scout was standing. The latter has recognized them, and he now stepped down to the water's edge to greet them.

'What means this, Hugh?' he said as he grasped the hand of the young man, who was the first to spring ashore.

In a few words he told him what their errand was, and ask him to lend them his aid in the search.

'Of course I will,' he answered. Luke Harding ain't a man to hang back when he is wanted in such a matter as this. And so Red Cloud has stole away your daughter, has he?' he added, turning to Reuben Allen.' 'Well if he don't rue the day he done this, then you may call me a liar.'

'Do you know where we would be likely to find him?' said the father anxiously.

'I think I do. If I ain't mightily mistaken he ain't a mile from the spot where we are standing. I believe I can take you to him in less than a half an hour.

'Do so and we shall forever be obliged to you,' said Hugh eagerly.

'I'll do it, boy; and I ask but one thing in return. If we find the gal, make her your wife at once. Don't run any risk of leaving her again.'

Hugh did not reply by words, but his looks showed he would profit by this advice.

CHAPTER III.

HOW THE SEARCH RESULTED.

Only a few words passed between the members of party, and then under the lead of Luke Harding they set off through the forest.

But one thought was uppermost in the minds of all, and that was to rescue Martha. Had she been wife or sister of each, they could not have been more concerned for her safety.

None questioned the leadership or knowledge of the scout, for they well knew that there was none in all that section of that country so competent as he to perform the work they had in hand.

Without a word or hardly a sound they went on through the forest, which was now illuminated by the rising sun.

For something like an half an hour they kept on, and then suddenly, the scout who was still in the advance, paused and signed for his companions to do the same.

They obeyed, looking eagerly about them in search of some cause for his motions.

There was no sign of the presence of a living being but themselves.

'What is it asked Hugh, in a low tone. 'Do you see anything of the redskins?'

'Hush!' answered Luke; 'we are close to the spot where Red Cloud has a little village of his own. Sometimes he has a half-dozen warriors with him, and sometimes he is here alone. I think, from the signs I have seen, that he has them with him now. Follow me close, and don't make any more noise than if you were treading on air. In my mind, he has got the gal with him here, and if we hope to get her away from him safe and sound, we've got to be cautious, for he is as cunning as a fox.'

This somewhat long speech, for him the scout delivered in almost a whisper and then the whole party moved on again, with such caution that hardly a sound was audible to their own ears, save that of their half suppressed breathing.

In this manner they went on for something like a dozen rods, and then another signal from the scout brought them again to a stand-still.

'Red Cloud is there, said Luke Harding, as he pointed before him. 'Now to find out if he has Martha with him.'

How shall we do it asked Hugh in a whisper.

'We must walk straight up to it. Red Cloud has pretended that he was a friend to the whites, so we will go on as if nothing had happened. But we will approach as noiselessly as possible, so that he will not have the advantage of us, if he wants to take it.

Bidding them by a motion of his hand, to follow him, he led the way straight towards the wigwams.

They approached to within twenty feet of the one occupied by Red Cloud before a sound was heard, or a savage showed himself.

Then a noise fell upon their ears, which they recognized at once.

It was that of Martha Allen, and she was pleading to some one for liberty.

The next moment they were at the entrance of the wigwam. The skins of a huge bear closed the entrance, and dashing this aside, the scout and Hugh entered, followed close by their companions.

One glance showed Red Cloud that all was lost. Quick as thought he grasped his tomahawk, and sprang towards Martha, who, with outstretched hands, was welcoming her friends, though she was bound so that she could not advance towards them. That he meant her destruction there was no doubt, but he did not achieve it. Before he reached her side, a blow from the knife of the scout ended his career forever.

There is little more to add. The savages in the other wigwams, seeing the odds were against them, fled into the forest, and vanished away, leaving our friends to return to the settlement in safety, where, a few days after, Martha became the wife of Hugh, who had loved her so long and well.

THE MODERN MEETIN'-HOUSE.

BY WILL S. HAYS.

Howdy, Davy! light and hitch; thar's no one home but me,
Thar ain't a man a livin', sir, I'd sooner like ter see;
Fer Nance and Liddy's gone to see a sick man on the hill,
An' Hiram's gone to get his grist at Jason Turner's mill.

I was in town las' Sunday, an' my heart an' ma agreed
To go to meetin'—ef you'll wait I tell you what I seed;
The bells were tolling lively on the balmy mornin' air,
An' folks were in a hurry, like the rushin' to a fair.

The meetin'-house was built of stone, the steeple pinted high,
The windows they were painted all the colors of the sky;
An' runnin' up the steeple was a great long lightnin' rod—
I kinder thought the members lacked a confidence in God.

The big bell sorter hushed itself an' then it rung some more,
An' people come in carriages an' got out at the door;
The wimmen fixed their dresses like they meant to make a call,
Thar faces showen they warn't thinking ov thar souls at all.

Wall, Davy, thar I stood and thought—'twas wicked I suppose—
Some go to church to close thar eyes, an' some to eye thar clothes;
I overheard old Missus Swell to Missus Stebbins say:
"My darter Becky's dress wan't done—she won't be here to-day."

I stood thar hesitatin' like what sort of move to make;
I felt that I should go inside for my salvation's sake;
I started meekly in the house, I know it wan't no harm,
With my old broad-brim hat in hand and jeans coat on my arm.

I went along 'bout half way up the velvet carpet ile,
The men and wimmen shut thar gates, and they begin to smile;
I see one open just a bit, went in and pulled it to,
When Brown, the banker, riz and said, "This ere's a rented pew."

I got out of his "rented pew" an' sot down near the door,
Expectin' for some man to say, "This ere's a rented floor."
A fine-dressed stranger he cum in, the members didn't wait,
But every feller jumped at him an' opened wide his gate.

The parson riz an' raised his han's with cold and haughty air,
An' everybody in the house stood up an' heard his prayer.
I don't know how it is with them—somehow I always feel
I'm doin' God injustice when I get too proud to kneel.

Then all sat down an' stared about, then at the parson's face,
While he put on his specs an' said, "Let's sing amazin' grace."
An organ busted loose up-stairs—the music it was gay,
It tickled them as couldn't sing and them wot had to pay.

The music quit, the parson riz—they passed the hats round next—
An' when the deckins sot them down, the parson took his text.
He preached almost two hours 'bout his faith in God to keep—
The wimmen folks were noddin' while thar husbands wor asleep.

One gal said to another, "Hev you seen my bow to-day?"
She'd nod her hed an' then say back, "The party it was gay."
One whispered loud enough behind her fan for me to hear,
"That bonnet Sofy Tag's got on is one she had last year."

The parson quit and then sat down—the organ played agin;
I thought if that was servin' God, the tunes they played was thin;
I've hearn the bands at circuses play jest the selfsame air.
The parson, when the organ quit, dismissed 'em all with prayer.

Now, Davy, if the angels seed what I did, I believe,
There warn't one among 'em all but what laffed in thar sleeve;
For God don't smile on Christians who His blessin's will abuse;
He hain't no use for organs, an' He don't like rented pews.

He rings no bells to tell 'em that the Sabbath's come once more;
The angels have no carriages to drive up to His door.
Such Christians might as well look up to God an' sweetly smile,
An' say, "I send my soul, dear Lord, I'm cummin' after a while.

Our Master up in Heaven, Davy, sees—hears everything;
He likes to see His children kneel, and loves to hear 'em sing;
For whar He lives the angels sing an' Christians get their dues—
His music costs Him nothin', and He has no rented pews.

Thar aint no use o' foolin' 'long the road down to the grave;
Thar is no way o' dodgin' when you've got your soul to save;
Fine churches, organs, carridges, clothes, rented pews an' "pelf"
Don't count that day—it lays between yer Maker and yourself.

TIM WELLER.

Outside—a mud-colored cottage, one of twenty, comprising the little fisher village off Gull's Head—a tumble-down fence inclosing sundry heaps of fish-bones and oyster-shells. In one corner a rose-bush and a weedy bed, with here and there an aster or a poppy striving to brighten with sturdy bloom the dismal surroundings. A long, low coast stretched southward, and to the north the light-house of Gull's Head, standing out sharply against the desolate gray of the sky. Inside—a scolding woman. What wonder that little Tim Weller stood long outside the door, waiting for his father to come up from the beach, evidently preferring the chilly dampness of the gathering night to the light and warmth of the cottage shared with his step mother's tongue.

You would never have called him a hero, this red-haired, freckled-faced Tim, who spent his days watching the buoys up and down the coast. He didn't look in the least heroic as he stood by the half-hung gate, the darkness falling about him.

He shivered as he listened to the "swash! swash!" of the rising tide dashing against the foot of the ledge, and looked down the beach impatiently for his father.

His life seemed dreadfully dwarfed and crowded as he thought of the days that were past and the days that were coming, all just alike, the eating and sleeping and watching the traps, nothing to mark the years as they slipped slowly by, spring and summer, fall and winter, no going to school. Tim had learned to read a little and that was all; nothing to help make a man of him, nothing for him to do but to follow straight in the tracks of his father's fishing brogans, and, perhaps—it was the height of every fisher-boy's ambition—to become the light-house keeper. Tim glanced along the low, black line of foam-flecked rocks running far into the sea, as dangerous a ledge as was ever shunned by mariners, half wondering why the lamps were not lighted.

Just then his father and old Dec. Greggett came slowly up from the beach.

"Looks just as it did afore the big storm a year ago," Greggett muttered, baring his head and pointing to the long, low line of white clouds rolling up to the west like smoke. "See them white caps?"

"Yes," Mr. Weller said, throwing a net across the fence. "Yes, sir, it'll blow great guns afore mornin'; wonder Thurlow han't set the lights. Come, Tim, lad," as a puff of warm air, redolent with the scent of golden corncake and fish fried brown, came from the open window. "Come, let us go to supper; 'night Greggett," and the cottage door closed behind them.

The wind blew a perfect hurricane, and the rain came down in torrents. Tim, as he sat before the fire toasting his feet preparatory to going to bed, shivered to hear the great waves dash upon the rock, falling back with a sullen roar, only to make fresh onset; to listen to the soughing of the wind around the cottage.

"Boom—boom—boom!"

Tim sprung to his feet, Mr. Weller laid his black clay pipe on the mantle shelf, and walked to the window.

"Some ship I s'pose has lost her reckoning," he said, adding complacently, "How they could do that with such a light as our'n is mor'n I can tell."

The Gull's Head light-house was a source of pride to every fisherman on the coast.

"Boom—boom—boom!"

Tim tugged at his boots, still soaked and shrunken with sea-water.

"Boom—boom—boom!" sounded the signal of distress, and to Tim's excited fancy the hoarse-voiced breakers seemed to answer, "Doomed—doomed—doomed!"

"Running into the rocks, its likely," muttered Mr. Weller, taking down his hat. "The fools must be blind as bats that can't see the light."

"Father, mayn't I go?"

"No, Tim, youe'r best off where you are," and Mr. Weller slouched his hat over his eyes, buttoned his smock tighter and went out.

"Boom—boom—boom!"

Tim couldn't stand that. He tore his cap from its nail and rushed out into the blinding rain, followed by his mother's warning voice:

"Tim, do ye mind what yer father told ye?"

Outside the gate he stopped a moment. Men were hurrying toward the beach.

He glanced in the direction of the Head. The mass of rock was dimly outlined against the pall-like blackness of the sky. Not a glimmer of light came from its crest. The white-capped waves were running mountain high—lashing themselves into a foaming rage against the rocky wall.

"Godfrey!" he ejaculated, "I don't see what Bill Thurlow can be thinking of not to light the tower such a night as this. Somebody'll have to go out."

On the beach men were running back and forth, staring into each other's faces in wild amazement. Some one had launched a small boat, and Greggett was saying:

"Can't be done. No boat could live in such a sea. Jake Thompson is the largest man among us, and he couldn't get a boat across them rocks to the tower such a night as this."

"Where's the life-boat?"

"Stove up when we took off the crew of the 'Polly Harms.'"

Tim heard it all.

"Father, father, let me go. I'm little and light and strong. I know all about the lights, for I have been there many a time with Bill. Please, father!"

At that instant came the boom of cannon from the distressed ship, and Tom, mad with excitement, rushed through the crowd to the water's edge and sprang into the boat. A great wave lifted it and sent it far into the sea.

No one spoke a word. The reckless daring of the boy awed them. Only a murmur, loud because so common, broke from the group upon the beach.

Once they saw him use his oars bravely. The boat poised on the crest of a hugh wave a moment, and then plunged into the trough of the sea.

Boom boom—boom. The ship was driving nearer, when suddenly, through the blinding spray, a gleam, like a star of hope, shot from the tower, and in an instant Gull's Head was all ablaze with light!

Shout after shout—cheer after cheer mingling with the rushing storm, went up from the beach. Salute after salute—not distress signals now—the ship's guns belched forth in answer to the hurrahs on shore. I hardly think it was second even to the great Anvil Chorus—and all this jubilee in Tim's honor. In the morning the sea was calm as if never a thought of tempest had ruffled its bosom, and when Tim came on shore and found himself lionized and praised and petted—even by his stepmother—I am afraid he could not have been so sorry as he should for poor Bill Thurlow's paralytic shock.

Somehow the captain discovered Tim's instrumentality in saving his vessel, and what the captain knew the ship-owners must have found out, for one night when he came home from his lobster buoys he found a bulky package sealed with red wax awaiting him, in which was a statement of a deposit made that day at the Seaton Bank by the owners of the steamship "Mermaid" in favor of Timothy Weller.

Tim is going to school now, and is doing his best to acquire a business education. His services will be in demand, as soon as he leaves school, in the office of the company whose vessel he saved; and his prospects for the future are most encouraging.

And I think he deserves his good fortune don't you?

DUDDYBAUGER PAINTS.

Mr. Duddybauger made some improvements on his place recently, and among them a two-story addition to his house, containing a nice, large summer kitchen on the first floor, and on the second an airy sleeping apartment and a nice bath-room.

This arrangement gave both Mr. and Mrs. Duddybauger a great deal of satisfaction and increased the capacity of the house so much that Mrs. Duddybauger immediately invited a deaf elderly maiden sister, possessed of property, to visit them, which invitation the elderly maiden sister immediately accepted with the most beautiful alacrity.

This extension had been finished on the inside, but outwardly it yet needed a coat or two of paint, as hitherto nothing but a simple coat of priming had been given it. This extra painting Duddybauger resolved to do himself, as business was somewhat dull, and he felt the need of a little out-door exercise. He had surrounded the extension with a bank some three or four feet wide on the top and of such a height as to fill in the distance between the top of the foundation wall and the original lay of the land, which was a sidehill sloping from the houses, thus rendering the banking rather high in places, and especially at the end overlooked by the bath-room window. Mr. Duddybauger borrowed a nice long ladder and he and Mrs. Duddybauger exhausted themselves and two mortal hours in raising it against the end of the extension, with the top directly over the bath-room window and the foot resting on the top of the bank; and then to procure an easy inclination they drew the bottom out as near the edge of the bank as they dared.

Then he proceeded to get into a new pair of sewing-circle-made overalls; so very small in the legs as to make him appear to anybody who didn't know him very well rather constrained and distant and formal, but so very, very ample elsewhere as to accommodate his very movement, and remotely suggest infinitude or space or something or boils.

Then he got his materials together and poured and ladled and mixed and dabbed till he thought he had about the right thing in paint, and then taking the pot and brush he mounted the ladder just three minutes after the elderly maiden sister, stepping into the bath-room, drew the curtain without taking particular notice of the ladder, and began disrobing for a bath.

Mr. Duddybauger's eyes were so full of paint that he couldn't see much, and it was not strange that the closely drawn curtain of the bath-room window escaped his notice; likewise the elderly maiden sister was so very deaf that she knew nothing of the rather close proximity of her brother-in-law, to say nothing of the fact that she had but just got up and knew nothing of the day's programme, all of which tended to make the situation one of beautiful and blissful ignorance.

Then Mr. Duddybauger, after having mounted as high as possible, hung the paint point on the top rung of the ladder and commenced to slop around with the brush and waste paint and grow weak in the arms and change hands and whistle softly and wonder how much a good painter would cost him by the day, and how long painters lived anyway, and if the smell of paint wasn't rather unhealthy after all, and if he hadn't better go down and add a little more oil or get a drink of water or something; and it was just as he had concluded to descend that the ladder moved a little; and a "Gramph! Gramph!" of swinish satisfaction attracted his attention.

Gazing down from the dizzy height he beheld a hog belonging to one of his neighbors energetically scratching himself against the foot of the ladder, which by the powerful movements of the animal was being gradually worked into the uncertain soil at the edge of the bank. The situation was appalling and Duddybauger tried to grasp it and the ladder and the paint brush all at once, but failed. He let the situation and the brush go to thunder, and clung to the top of that ladder with all the energy of despair.

Then Duddybauger commenced to say "Hi, you there," and "Stop—won't you?" and "Say—you there, do you know what you're a doing?" and then he tried to reason with the animal and to show him the impropriety of the thing, but did no good.

He dared not stir for fear of helping things too much, so he just held the ladder and his breath and shut his eyes and set his teeth and braced himself for the shock; and when a vigorous boost sent the foot of that ladder flying out into the air and brought the top end rasping down over those clapboards with a noise like young thunder, Duddybauger sent his finger-nails into the wood and his thoughts into the skies, and went sailing through the sash of that bath-room window along with the end a ladder and other things and a pot of paint with, a rush that would have done credit to a comet.

The ladder stopped at the window-sill, but Duddybauger and the paint pot kept right on. He looked around for something to stop against, too, but as he didn't see anything nearer than the bath-room floor, he thought that he might as well see the thing through anyhow and get rid of such a terrible suspense, so he just sailed on and brought up just where he had intended to, on the floor, along with a lot of tin and paint, and glass, and wood splinters, and stars, and things, and it occurred to him that the party who moved out just as he came in possessed a great deal more judgment than clothes, and was remarkably agile and decided for one so old. This interested him so that he sat there and thought it over and some other things until his wife came for her sister's clothes, and then he got up and went down-stairs, and after asking his wife to apologize to her sister for him, he went out to the woodpile and delivered an oration, in which he said that painting wasn't his best hold, but he thought if he had about the right kind of a stick he might possibly satisfy the public as to his ability to scratch that hog's back for him.

For a week after this Duddybauger divided his spare time between watching for that hog and picking little pieces of glass out of his hands, and trying to make up with his sister-in-law; but as he didn't succeed much he cooled himself off and went to work and repaired his fences.—Danbury News.

TIMBER.—In England timber is jealously guarded, and farmers have commenced to plant trees, and there are a greater number of acres under Scotch pine now than at any other period in Scotland's history, notwithstanding the immense quantity that has been cut down for lumber. Much of this pine, however, will not be available for many years, and larches are therefore being planted, as they are of rapid growth and yield good timber. The timber question should have more prominence in this country than is now awarded it.

Locomotion—Ancient and Slow Methods.

The Boston Transcript, in an article on locomotion, remarks that the canal, turnpike, plankroad, steamboat, railway, river and mountain tunnel, and electric telegraph, are of comparatively recent production in the Western Hemisphere. Julius Cæsar (B. C. 27) occupied eight days in journeying from the river Rhone to Rome, 860 miles. At the commencement of the Christian era, fifty-six miles was considered a good twelve hours' journey by the cisium, or postchaise. The news of the fall of Maximin (A. D. 244) was carried to Rome from Aquileia, 320 miles, in four days.

Postchaises were introduced by Trajan, A. D. 100. Carriages were known in France in 1300, when but two existed in Paris; in 1550, there were but three in that city, and those were of rude construction. Henry IV. had one, but it was without straps or springs. A strong cob-horse (haquenee) was let for short journeys; later, these were harnessed to a vehicle called coche-a-haquenee, hence the name hackney-coach. These were let for hire in Paris in 1650, at the Hotel Fiacre. They were known in England in 1555, but not the art of making them. When first made in England, during the reign of Elizabeth, they were called whirlicotes. Omnibuses were invented at Nantes in 1826, and were introduced into London in the year following by an enterprising coach proprietor named Shillaber. They were introduced into New York in 1828.

John Winthrop, the founder of New England in 1630, and who died in 1640, never saw a stage-coach. In 1660 there were but six in England. Two days were occupied in passing from London to Oxford, fifty-four miles. In 1669 it was announced that a vehicle called the "flying-coach" would perform the journey between sunrise and sunset. It excited as much interest as the opening of a new railway a generation ago. In 1737 the mail from London arrived at Edinburgh with only one letter in it. Even as late as 1760, it took four days to pass from London to Liverpool, two hundred and ten miles. It was not until 1825 that the daily line of coaches, established between the two cities, accomplished the distance in forty-six hours. And even as late as 1835 there were only seven coaches which ran daily between the two cities.

In 1631 Sir Roger Saltonstall was six weeks upon a journey from Salem to Jamestown. In 1636 Rev. Mr. Rogers, the second minister of Ipswich, was twenty-four weeks on a voyage from Gravesend to Boston. The first stage-coach in America started from the site of No. 90 North street, Boston, for Portsmouth, in 1661. The first line of stage-coaches between Boston and New York was established in 1732, a coach leaving each city once a month; fourteen days were required to complete the journey. The first line of stage-coaches from New York for Boston started from the Fresh Water, now the site of the Tombs, in 1772.

In 1776 the news of the repeal of the Stamp act was eight weeks crossing the ocean. The first express agent from Boston to New York carried an account of the destruction of the tea in Boston harbor. He left Boston on Friday afternoon and arrived in New York on Tuesday afternoon. In 1773 Josiah Quincy, father and grandfather of the Mayors of that name of Boston, spent thirty-three days upon a journey from Georgetown, S. C., to Philadelphia. In 1775 Gen. Washington was eleven days in going from Philadelphia to Boston. Upon his arrival at Watertown he was met by a committee of citizens and congratulated upon the speed of his journey.

The first regular communication between Boston and Gloucester was established in 1788 by Jonathan Lowe, who ran a two-horse open carriage between the two places twice a week each way. Besides the Gloucester coach, only four stages ran into Boston at that time. In 1802 the mail-stage started from Boston for New York on Monday morning at 8 o'clock and was due in New York at noon on Friday. The news of the battle of New Orleans, January 8, 1815, was twenty-nine days reaching Philadelphia. Sixty years ago the regular mail-time between New York and Albany was eight days. As late as 1824 the United States mail was thirty-two days in going from Portland to New Orleans.

The news of the death of Napoleon Bonaparte at St. Helena, May 5, 1821, reached New York on the 15th of August. The news of the death of Gen. Washington at Mount Vernon, December 14, 1799, reached Boston on the tenth day after its occurrence. The news of the death of Thomas Jefferson at Monticello, July 24, 1826, reached Boston on the fourth day afterward. The news of the death of President Harrison, on the 4th of April, 1844, reached Boston on the third day afterward. The news of the death of President Taylor, on the 9th of July, 1850, was known in all the principal cities of the Union within one hour after its occurrence.

PRESERVATION OF THE TEETH.—Bowditch, in examining the teeth of forty persons of different professions, and living different kinds of life, found in almost all vegetable and animal parasites. The parasites were numerous in proportion to the neglect of cleanliness. The means ordinarily employed to clean the teeth had no effect on the parasites, while soapy water appeared to destroy them. If this (says the Lancet) be a true version of the cause of caries—the action of acids, supplemented by the action of fungi—then it follows that the great means of saving teeth is to preserve the most scrupulous cleanliness of the mouth and teeth, and to give to the rinsing liquids a slightly alkaline character, which is done by the admixture of a little soap. This is not so pleasant a dentrifice as some, but it is effective and scientific. Acids not only dissolve the salts of the teeth, but favor the increase of the fungi of the mouth. No increase of fungi and no action on the dental tissues occur in solutions slightly alkaline, such as a weak solution of soap. The good effects of stopping teeth, in the light of these experiments, are intelligible. The penetration of acids and fungi is prevented.

THE GREAT MEDICAL REFORMATION.—The Satanic Theory that preparations which inflame the brain are, in any sense of the word, remedies, has been overthrown, and can never be re-established. The wonderful effects which have attended the use of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS as an antidote to the causes of disease and a cure for every controllable ailment, have demonstrated the utter fallacy of the doctrine that alcohol is a tonic as well as a stimulant. The New and incomparable Vegetable Remedy which has superseded the death-draught of rum bitters, is as free from every intoxicating element as the dew of Heaven, yet see how it is invigorating the nervous, relieving the bilious, curing the dyspeptic, purifying the blood of the scrofulous, strengthening the debilitated, arresting premature decay, and replacing despondency and weakness with cheerfulness and activity. Truly a grand Medical Revolution is in progress. 45

Success Based Upon Merit.

It is a subject of general remark, among both wholesale and retail druggists, that no medicine introduced to the American public has ever gained such a popularity and met with so large a sale in all parts of the land, in the same length of time, as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. This cannot depend upon its having been more largely advertised than any other medicine, as such is not the case. The correct explanation, we think, is found in the fact that this medicine produces the most wonderful and perfect cures of very bad cases of bronchial, throat and lung diseases, is undoubtedly the most perfect and efficient remedy for all kinds of coughs, that has ever been introduced to the public, and at the same time possesses the greatest of blood-purifying and strengthening properties that medical science has been able to produce, thus rendering it a sovereign remedy not only in the cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Hoarseness and Coughs, but also for all diseases of the liver and blood, as scrofulous diseases, blotches, rough skin, pimples, black specks and discolorations. It has therefore a wide range of application and usefulness, and it not only gives the most perfect satisfaction to all who use it, but far exceeds the expectations of the most sanguine, thus eliciting the loudest praise, and making permanent living advertising mediums of all who use it. For these reasons it is that there is not perhaps a druggist in all the vast domain of this continent, who tries to please his customers and supply their wants, that does not keep and sell large quantities of this most valuable medicine.

THROAT AND LUNG DISEASES!!

It is the vital principle of the Pine Tree, obtained by a peculiar process in the distillation of the tar, by which its highest medicinal properties are retained. Tar even in its crude state has been recommended by eminent physicians of every school. It is confidently offered to the afflicted for the following simple reasons:

1. IT CURES,—not by abruptly stopping the cough—but by dissolving the phlegm and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter causing the irritation. In cases of seated CONSUMPTION it both prolongs and renders less burdensome the life of the afflicted sufferer.

2. Its healing principle acts upon the irritated surface of the lungs, penetrating to each diseased part, relieving pain, and subduing inflammation.

3. IT PURIFIES AND ENRICHES THE BLOOD. Positively curing all humors, from the common PIMPLE or ERUPTION to the severest cases of Scrofula. Statistics of the "Wards of the State."

[From the Detroit Tribune.]

We have received from the Secretary of State his first annual abstract of statistical information relative to the insane, deaf, dumb and blind persons in Michigan at the time of the general assessment for 1873. The abstract does not include the inmates of our public institutions provided for the care of these classes, and contains information from but forty-three of the seventy organized counties in the State, and as the reports from some of these are doubtless incomplete it is far from showing the whole number of persons in the State of the class treated of. Still, as the Secretary says, "it is valuable as a starting point, and will no doubt promote more careful and prompt collection and return of the information hereafter."

From this abstract we learn that there are, exclusive of those in asylums, thirty-one insane persons in Michigan—twenty-three females and eight males. Of these one male and fourteen females are married, two females widowed and one divorced; fourteen are supported by individuals, ten by the county and three by themselves; twenty-one are reported to have good habits, two bad and one average, and twenty possess good health; twelve have never had any treatment.

Thirty persons are reported deaf—seventeen males and thirteen females. Their social condition, so far as reported, is, single twelve males, and five females; married, five of each sex. Seven males and ten females are supported by individuals, and one female and eight males support themselves. But five of this class, three males and two females, were born deaf. Thirteen have never had any treatment. All are reported to be of good habits. Twenty-four persons are reported partially deaf.

In the class of deaf and dumb 122 persons are reported—seventy-one males and fifty-one females. Thirty-five males and twenty-seven females are single, eight males and nine females are married; the social condition of twenty-eight males and fourteen females is unknown, and one widow is reported. As to mental condition, 114 are rated "bright," and four—two of each sex—are idiotic. Of those whose habits are known 101 are set down as good, one bad and three average. Thirty-four of each sex are supported by individuals and the county and three by the county, and twenty-seven males and three females support themselves. Thirty-seven females and sixty males are known to have never had any treatment. Forty-one males and twenty-five females were born deaf and dumb.

Nine males and seven females are dumb. Of these eight males and three females are reported single and one married couple is noted. Seven males and three females were born dumb. Ten have never received any treatment. None are known to have bad habits.

Of the blind we have with us seventy-eight males and forty females, and of these three males and four females have been so from birth. Fourteen males and six females are single, twenty-one males and and twenty females married, and three males and four females are widowed. Twenty-two males and five females support themselves, sixty-one are supported by individuals, three by individuals and counties, and eleven by counties. Forty-eight have received treatment, and forty-eight are known to have never had any. Twenty-three males and seventeen females are reported partially blind.

The occupations of these unfortunates, so far as known, show among the insane one hotel-keeper and three laborers, and four farmers' wives and five housewives. Of the deaf nine are farmers, and of artists, grocers, gunsmiths, and merchants there are one each, and one lady teacher, two housewives, and one farmer's wife. Among the deaf and dumb we find twenty-two farmers, three cabinet-makers, twelve laborers, four instructors, two farmers' sons, and an artist, a carpenter, a filer, a gunsmith, a shoemaker, a stationer, a stone-cutter and a student. Among the females of this class are nine housewives, three farmers' wives, one domestic, one farmer, a nurse, a seamstress, and a student. Among the dumb are two farmers and one housewife. Of the blind males twenty-nine are farmers, nine are laborers, six are miners, and four are peddlers. The bead-makers, blacksmiths, broom-makers, carpenters and joiners, carriage-makers, and masons each have one representative. Among the females there are six farmers' wives, seven housewives, two laborers, a bead-maker, and a farmer.

A Grand Photographic Display.

The Sixth Annual Exhibition of the National Photographic Association is to be held this year in the city of Chicago, at the Inter-State Exposition building, on July 14, 15, 16 and 17. The objects of these Conventions and Exhibitions are twofold: First, to educate Photographers to a higher standard of excellence in the productions of their art. Second, to educate the people in what good pictures are; all the leading photographers throughout this country and Europe are to send of their best productions, which will make the finest display of art pictures ever got together and worth going many hundred miles to see. The Exhibitions are to be thrown open to visitors free. There will also be on exhibition samples of all the apparatus and appliances pertaining to the art, which, in their varied forms and kinds, are well worthy the attention of all thinking minds.

A FLORAL MONSTER.—On the 23d of March, which was the twenty-fifth anniversary of Victor Emanuel's accession to the throne, the ladies of Rome united together in presenting the King with a bouquet. It was not a nosegay for his button-hole, or a fragrant trifle which he could wear in his hand. On the contrary, it was between six and seven feet high, and required six stout porters to bear it in to his Majesty's presence. It was, in truth, a floral monster, in the design of which taste and elegance were sacrificed to enormity. It consisted of a base three feet square, and a stem surmounted by a vase of graceful shape, with an appropriate inscription. It was composed entirely of violets, pansies and mignonette, forming a sort of mosaic for which Rome is famous.

The Destruction of the Sugar-Maple.

One of the leading maple-sugar makers claims that but very few productions, in the entire system of New England agriculture, realize to the farmer so large a profit as the manufacture of that commodity. As prices have averaged for the last ten years, it is certainly a feature of home industry well worthy of consideration. Many of the farmers on the hills who own and utilize large sugar orchards have become convinced by practical experience that it is one of their very best-paying harvests, tobacco alone yielding, perhaps, a greater net profit. Nature has appointed this harvest at a season when the farmer can accomplish but little labor to advantage, and, unless he is engaged in this occupation, his time and efforts will yield him but little remuneration; yet, without taking this point into account, even did the work come at any other time in the year, it would pay grandly. Maple syrup and sugar hold a high price in the market, and without a doubt will sustain their present rates, with probabilities of advance in the future. In the face of these facts, it is certainly somewhat of a mystery why a large proportion of farmers should manifest such an utter indifference to the preservation and perpetuity of the sugar maple. In no other part of the country does its flourish so naturally and vigorously as among the eastern mountains; and wherever its delicious sweets are extracted, it repays the owner three-fold for the labor. Still our maple groves and forests are rapidly disappearing, and at the present rate of decrease, another half-century will witness their almost utter annihilation. The process of making maple sugar is evidently destined to become one of the "lost arts" unless some special interposition stays this work of destruction. The demand for broom-handles and other articles of utility, into which this wood is converted, is insatiable. Thousands of our grand old emerald-crowned monarchs of the forest are sacrificed to this demand annually, and of course the aggregate amount of sugar manufactured must decrease in ratio with the decrease of the material from which it is derived. It will soon become a luxury in the market, commanding a price that must teach every shrewd and sensible owner of maple orchards the expediency, even in a pecuniary sense, of preserving this beautiful feature of our New England landscape.—Concord Patriot.

An Index to Marriage.

It don't require an astrologer, a medium or a gypsy with a direct pack of cards. It is very simple—lies in a nutshell, and can be expressed in a few words. They are these: The last person you would naturally think of.

If a girl expresses a fondness for majestic men with large whiskers, make up your mind that she will marry a very small man with none. If she declares that "mind" is all she looks for, expect to see her stand before the altar with a pretty fellow who has just sense enough to tie a cravat bow. If, on the contrary, she declares she must have a handsome husband, look about you for the plainest person in her circle of acquaintance, and declare "that is the man," for it will be.

Men are almost as bad. The gentleman who desires a wife with a mind and mission, marries a lisping baby who screams at the sight of a mouse, and hides her head when she hears a sudden knock at the door. And the gentleman who dreaded anything like strong-mindedness, exults in the fact that his wife is exactly everything he declared he detested.

If a girl says of one, "Marry him! I'd rather die," look upon the affair as settled, and expect cards to the wedding of those two people.

If a man remark of a lady, "Not any style at all!" await patiently the appearance of his name in the matrimonial column in connection with that very lady's.

And if any two people declare themselves "friends, and nothing more," you may know what will come next.

There is no hypocrisy in all this, and such matches are invariably the happiest. People do not know themselves, and make great mistakes about their intentions. Love is terribly perplexing when he first begins to upset one's theories, and when his arrow first pierces the heart there is such a fluttering there that it is hard to guess the cause. Besides, man proposes and God disposes, and it is the "I don't know what" with which people fall in love, and not those peculiarities which could be given in a passport.

INSTINCT OF TURTLES.—Audubon, the naturalist, stated that at a certain place on the coast of Florida, sea-turtles, those huge, stolid-looking reptiles on which aldermen are fed at the expense of the tax-payers, possess an extraordinary faculty of finding places. Working their way up out of the reach of the tide-water with their flippers, quite a deep hole is excavated in which a batch of eggs are deposited, and then carefully covered up. On reaching the water, they not unfrequently swim three hundred miles out to sea, foraging appropriate food. When another batch of eggs are developed, after a lapse of about fourteen days, they will return unerringly in a direct line, even in the darkest night, and visit the buried eggs. Removing the sand, more are deposited and secured. Away they go again, as before. They know instinctively the day and hour when the young brood, incubated by solar rays, will break the shell, and are promptly on the the spot to liberate them from their prison. As soon as fairly out of the hole, the mother turtle leads them down the bank to the waves, and there end her paternal solicitude and maternal duties.

Pathos.

That was a fine touch of pathos in the last remark of John Stewart, who, while waiting on the gallows, in Nevada, the last little attention which the Sheriff could pay him, handed a half-consumed paper of fine-cut tobacco to a faithful servitor, with the words: "Give this to Larry Murphy, of Genoa, and tell him that the last man that took a chew from that paper of tobacco was Johnny Stewart." Johnny having taken to hemp, had no further use for tobacco, and Larry cannot help remember Johnny, if he choose.

American Judges in Egypt.

The new law authorizing the President to accept, for the citizens of the United States, the jurisdiction of certain tribunals in the Ottoman dominions and Egypt, established, or to be established under the authority of the Sublime Porte and of the government of Egypt, provides that whenever the President of the United States shall receive satisfactory intimation that the Ottoman Government, or that of Egypt, has organized other tribunals on a basis likely to secure to citizens of the United States, in their dominions, the same impartial justice which they now enjoy there under the judicial functions exercised by the Minister, Consuls, and other functionaries of the United States, pursuant to the act of Congress approved the 22d of June, 1860, entitled "An act to carry into effect provisions of the treaties between the United States, China, Persia, and other countries, giving certain judicial powers to Ministers and Consuls, in those countries, and for other purposes," he is authorized to suspend the operations of that act as to the dominions in which such tribunals may be organized, so far as the jurisdiction of said tribunals may embrace matters now cognizable by the Minister, Consuls, or other functionaries of the United States in said dominions, and to notify the Government of the Sublime Porte, or that of Egypt, or any of them, that the United States during such suspension, will accept for their citizens the jurisdiction of these tribunals over citizens of the United States, which has heretofore been exercised by the Minister, Consuls, or other functionaries of the United States. The bill authorizes the President, for the benefit of American citizens residing in the Turkish dominions to accept the recent law of the Ottoman Porte ceding the right of foreigners possessing immovable property in those dominions.

WOLF-BRED CHILDREN.—Some of the best of the old German legends turn on the were-wolf tradition. It was believed that wolves sometimes stole and nursed children, who grew into a sort of fiend, with the intelligence of a man and the thirst for blood of an animal. The belief was not without reason. More than once children have been found in wolf-dens. The orphanage at Secundra, Hindostan, took charge, six years ago, of two such waifs. One of them "drank like a dog, and liked a bone and raw meat better than anything else; he would never remain with the other boys, but hide away in any dark corner; clothes he never would wear, but tore them into fine shreds." This boy soon died. The other, though he is now 14 years old, cannot speak. The one sign of civilization he shows is a diminished taste for raw meat—a small result for six years' training.

THE editor of the Michigan Argus seems to be the sort of man one likes to hear of as standing at the helm of a newspaper. A subscriber lately came to him with an article in his hand and this speech in his mouth; "Put that in the Argus, or stop my paper." The editor did not put in the article, but erased the subscriber's name, and even surprised him by surviving the event. "We have no desire," he says, "to lose subscribers; and yet there is running through our head an old and familiar rhyme, penned, no doubt, by an editor in just our fix:

'We do not belong to our patrons,
This paper is wholly our own;
Whoever likes it can take it,
Who don't can let it alone.'"

THE GRAND PACIFIC HOTEL,

Opposite the Government Square and the new Federal Buildings, is, without doubt, the most perfect hotel structure in the world, and the largest edifice representing private enterprise in the United States. Its four fronts, on Jackson, Lasalle, Quincy and Clark Streets, have an extent of ten hundred and twenty-two (1,022) feet. It was opened to the public on the 20 day of June, 1873, and has proved to its multitude of patrons, representing the best elements of the traveling community, that well-chosen and unsurpassed character of all its appointments and arrangements (of which special mention may be made of the Baths—Turkish, Electric and Vapor) [illegible] before given to an enterprise of its class.

The magnificence of the exterior, its great interior rotundas, superb public apartments, the unequaled suites of private rooms on its mile of corridors, and the system and detail of its management, have not only won the pride and admiration of our citizens and guests, but furnish the key to the success of the GRAND PACIFIC, which from the outset has never been equaled by any previous or cotemporary enterprise. Central to all the great railway depots, the banks, wholesale stores, and places of elegant shopping and amusements, it is at all seasons, by its lightness, spaciousness and perfection of ventilation, the most comfortable as well as elegant home for the resident guest and tourist ever offered. And it will be maintained as it has begun, the most complete and perfect hotel in the world—a claim for it sustained by the guests of the past eleven months, many of them our patrons since the opening of the former Sherman House, July 8, 1861.

CINCINNATI, June 11, 1873.

C. C. OLIN & Co., Waukesha, Wis.: Having used your water from the Mineral Rock Spring, Waukesha, Wis., for the diabetes, I have found great relief from the use of the same. Before I commenced using this water, my physician reported to me the specific gravity of my urine was 33, and after using it for twenty days the specific gravity of the urine was reduced to 21, showing a great improvement, and finding great relief in not being compelled to urinate so frequently. I had other waters, but give it as my opinion that the Mineral Rock Spring is preferable. And I do earnestly recommend it to all who are afflicted with the disease commonly known as Diabetes.

Respectfully yours, ALFRED WILSON,
Dept. Coll. Int. Rev., No. 8 W. Third Street,
Cincinnati, Ohio.

HUDSON, Wis., Jan. 2, 1873.

MESSRS. C. C. OLIN & Co.—Dear Sirs: I am astonished at the immediate benefit received from the use of your healing water. I commenced using the water as directed, and found a marked change, reducing specific gravity of urine 30° down to 20 o in three days, producing a moist skin and a direct perspiration, making an entire change for the better in my digestion. I also find it beneficial to the liver. Since drinking the water, I rest much better at night, and without being disturbed, as I usually was before, from two to three times during every night. Thinking of visiting your spring in the summer, believing the water to do all that you claim, and knowing the favorable results in my own case, you will please express the forty gallons immediately, as I am satisfied that it does not lose any of its healing properties by shipping. I think your price very reasonable, and will advertise your Spring all I can, for the benefit of invalids suffering with those incurable diseases of Bright's Disease and Saccharine Diabetes, as I know they can be immediately relieved by drinking Mineral Rock Spring Water. With kindest regards, yours truly, GEO. JONES.

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA,

FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

This compound of the vegetable alteratives, Sarsaparilla, Dock, Stillingia and Mandrake with the Iodides of Potassium and Iron makes a most effectual cure of a series of complaints which are very prevalent and afflicting. It purifies the blood, purges out the lurking humors in the system, that undermine health and settle into troublesome disorders. Eruptions of the skin are the appearance on the surface of humors that should be expelled from the blood. Internal derangements are the determination of these same humors to some internal organ, or organs, whose action they derange, and whose substance they disease and destroy. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA expels these humors from the blood. When they are gone, the disorders they produce disappear, such as Ulcerations of the Liver, Stomach, Kidneys, Lungs, Eruptions and Eruptive Diseases of the Skin, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter and Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Ulcers and Sores, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Pain in the Bones, Side and Head, Female Weakness, Sterility, Leucorrhœa arising from internal ulceration and uterine disease, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Emaciation and General Debility. With their departure health returns.

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS, please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, June 11th, 1874

New Hampshire got its governor last week by the action of the legislature, Weston, the democrat, securing the vote.

The people in Northern Iowa have been suffering terribly from the destruction of their crops and seed by grasshoppers last year, and are now in great need of assistance.

Grover, the Democratic candidate for Governor in Oregon; Ladow, candidate for Congress, and the entire Democratic ticket have been elected by an average majority of 1,066.

Congressional Printer Mr Clapp turns out to be a defaulter. He beat the government anywhere from fifty to one hundred thousand dollars, but if there is much said about it, it may hurt the Republican party.

The Orangemen in the Eastern cities are preparing to celebrate the Battle of the Boyne, on July 12th, as usual. In New York the Orangemen and the Roman Catholics, who are ancient enemies, generally have a huge rough and tumble fight, which sometimes ends rather seriously. The authorities are taking due precautions this year to prevent a recurrence of the disgraceful scenes of the past year.

The farmers of the West and particularly those of the corn-producing States, feel encouraged with the crop prospects. In May the weather was favorable for corn and grass, and a much larger area of that grain has been planted then usual. This will be in demand, as a heavy surplus will be required to supply the deficiencies of the small yield of 1873, in the New England and Middle States.

The Cincinnati Enquirer opens its mouth and gives a distinct sound to the following sentiment which strikes us as the true gospel for a newspaper: The Enquirer believes in democratic principles, and has fought some good battles in their behalf. It upholds the democratic organization, but it owes no allegiance to men who train with the democratic party because it affords them opportunity to grow fat. We have repeatedly declared that we would not support unfit men for office.

Richardson, the United States Secretary of the Treasury, has finally resigned and the President has selected Gen. Bristow, of Kentucky, to fill the position. Richardson was forced to resign owing to his disgraceful connection witn the Sarborn contracts.

He would have been publicly censured, if he had not given up his office.

Now Grant has appointed him Judge of the Court of Claims. If any of our farmer friends had committed any such misdemeanor, would they have been thus exalted to an honorable position? But such is the course of the Grant party.

Richardson has been removed. Sanborn has been dismissed. Banning has been banished. But Sawyer still hangs on. Why does not Sawyer receive his just deserts? Alas! there is no good vacancy for him. The Cabinet positions are all filled, and there isn't a spare custom house in the land not held by a devoted relative. There are a few consulates, but it would be an insult to Sawyer to offer him a mere consulate. The post of minister would do. Jay, however, doesn't seem to be coming home, and Cushing will live down his mistake in having dined with Castelar, so that there is positively nothing for it, but to let Sawyer remain where he is.

A bill has just passed the House which puts the machinery of the law in the territory of Utah into the hands of a Marshall and his deputies. It is aimed at the extinction of polygamy.

During the discussion of the bill the most intemperate language was used by some of its advocates. The Mormons were said to be in rebellion. Men declared they would vote for the bill, no matter what its provisions were. The animus of the disputants is very unworthy and undignified. By the new bill unlimited power will be placed in the hands of United States official, and we know what th[illegible] means. We have seen it in Louisiana, South Carolina, Arkansas and elsewhere. It means the subjugation of Utah and the utter suppression of the people. The Mormons are to be persecuted with unsparing vengeance for daring to cling to a peculiar belief.

The Senate acted yesterday upon the nominations of General Bristow to be Secretary of the Treasury, and of the retiring Secretary Richardson to be a Judge of the Court of Claims. General Bristow was confirmed without opposition, while a strong majority of the Senate opposed the confirmation of Mr. Richardson. An officer who ought to have been impeached is, under the operation of Grant's Civil Service Reform rules, moved to a National judicial position.

Our friend John H Baker, standing Republican Candidate for Congress from this district, seems to have got ruffled by something the Goshen Democrat said, as the following would indicate, taken from that paper of last week. "Mr. John H Baker came into our office on Thursday morning, flourishing a heavy cane, and said he supposed we were the author of an article on "women at the poles." On assenting to the statement he said he had come to give us due notice that if we ever committed an assault on his wife or himself, or any of his wife's relations by the Eternal God, either you or I will get hurt!" He said further that he did not say this to intimidate us, but as a fair warning. We disclaimed ever having assaulted his wife, himself, or any of his wife's relations, but when either of them come out at the elections or on public occasions and make public speeches, we should not fail to report their speeches and take the consequences. That he could not intimidate us it he would; at which the Hon. J. H. B. took his departure in high dudgeon.

Now when we heard John intimate that he came to warn, and not to fight, or even intimidate, our feathers remained unruffled. We saw that he was mad—very mad—almost as much so as a young lady of Pine Creek, in early times, expressed herself for some slight she had received at a party—"I was so mad I could have jumped up and bit my navel off." But when we saw it was all to evaporate in a set speech we remained unusually calm, until we could reply. John is good on a speech.

We are some on a speech, too, and John knows it. We are ready for him in that line at any time. But if John really means fight at some subsequent under certain contingencies we will consider that also. We know Prince John to be a high-toned gentleman. He means a fair fight, let the weapons be what they may. It means not only a challenge, the selection of seconds, the choice of weapons, but the selection of ground for the combat. We saw there was strategy in the suggestion of John to have the fight at some future day. John is full of strategy. He wants to put himself in training. But there is nothing ungentlemanly or contumacious in that. It is fair.

He puts the wager of battle upon an assault on himself or any of his wife's relations. We accept that also, although the latter are so devilish numerous, and embrace on the republican male side so many aspirants for office whom we are bound to oppose, that it will keep us upon our mettle all the time. But we must abide the definition of the word ASSAULT. Webster says—"A violent attack with blows, weapons, &c. 2d. A violent attack with words, arguments, appeals. An attempt to beat another, accompanied by a degree of violence, but without touching his person."—Now if John should run for Congress, or any of his wife's relations for any other office, as a democratic editor we should fill the second bill of degnitions to the letter, and hence we might as well book ourselves for the fight, and therefore we have some choice in the preliminary arrangements. We will select the Court House square. It is a beautiful greensward, upon which the champions of the belt could try their muscle. And the shades of evening tide to avoid the loss of too much perspiration. As we knew John kept clear of gunpowder during the war—preferring to stay at home and steal our legislative office, for which we owe him a licking—we refuse all deadly weapons, and agree to enter the ring as a pugilist, and upon a challenge from John, and after the first pass if we do not thrash him inside of five minutes, we agree to abdicate the editorial chair of the Goshen Democrat.

—OF—

DeKALB COUNTY

NUMBER FIFTEEN.

At this session also, the Jurors were selected by the commissioners, for the first circuit court, (viz. the spring term 1837.) Here are the names thus selected.

GRAND JURORS.

John Rose, Dan'l Rhodes, Wm. Miller, John Watson, Ira Allen, Jacob Plattern, Cor'us Woodcox, John Smith, Benj. Alton John Holton, Solomon Showers, Henry Miller. Colin Robinson, John Blair, Nathan Wyatt, James Stanley, John F. Rhodes, Sam'l Eakright.

PETIT JURORS.

Wm. Monroe, Jesse Jackson; John P. Widney, Francis A. Wilbur, Jeremiah Rhodes, Sam'l Johnson, Wm. Mathews Dudley Thorp, James Hadsell, Ezra Dickinson, J. J. Gunsenhouser, Henry Robinson, Homer Abel, Leonard Boice, Elmore French, Peter Draggoo, Joshph Miller, Joseph Vandoler, Henry Bricker, Levi Lockwood, S. M. Hackley, Jacob Miller, Sam'l Headley, Chris. Hall.

In our last chapter, we closed by giving the names of the jury impanneled for the first court held in the county, in the spring of 1838. We will now give the names of the jurors for the second court, viz, the fall term for 1838. We give them, because the juries impanneled for these two courts embrace nearly all the first settlers, who were eligible, and, in this way; we can present you a more complete list of pioneers than we could collect by other means.

Grand jury for the fall term of 1838. Daniel Strong, Daniel Moody, Andrew Surface, Daniel Webber, Joseph Stroup, Charles D. Handy, Peter Boyer, Wm. Rogers, John Clemmer, George DeLong, Jacob Weirick, Peter Day, R. R. Lountberry, Kneeland Abbott, John Webster, Luther Keep, Asher W. Coburn.

PETIT JURY.

Michael Boyer, Wm. Means, Alonzo Hill, Eli Welch, Roger Aldrich; Hector Blake, Frazer Bartlett, George W. Weeks, David Knight, John Miller, Henry Dove, George Babcock, Robert Work; Samuel Taraev, Lot B. Coe, Solomon Woodcox, J. Means, Wm. Day, Hazzard Webster, Michael Knight, Lavinus Abel, Joshua Feagler, Willis Bishop, David Butler.

We have mentioned the location of the first roads laid out through Auburn;—one north and south, and the other east and west. We will now mention a few more of the first roads in the county, and the commissioners who located them.

State road from Auburn to Fort Wayne by way of Vandoler's mill; commissioners T. L. Yates and Benjamin Miiller.

State road from Angola to Ft. Wayne, west of Auburn; commissioners, Daniel Moody, Solomon Showers and Henry Miller.

Road on the south west side of Fish creek; Simon Aldrich, Peter Boyer and Roger Aldrich.

The road on the north-west side of the St. Joseph river had been run out at an early day, by commissioners whose names I do not know; Reuben J. Dawson, being the surveyor;—but it was afterwards reviewed, and straightened by John Blair, John Webster and Hector Blake.

Road from Enterprize to Uniontown; Daniel Kepler, Michael Boyer and John Earlee, commissioners.

At the May session 1838, of the county commissioners, the following appropriations were made, from the three per cent. fund for the roads mentioned below viz:

Goshen and Defiance road, $800,00; Fort Wayne and Coldwater, $800,00; St. Joseph State road, $400,00. On the 6th of March, 1839, the county board appointed T. J. Freeman, Wesley Park, and Nelson Payne, commissioners to build a jail; and, in April, 1840, they appointed the same persons commissioners to build a cours house. When we come to write particularly of Union township, we will give some items in reference to the growth of Auburn, first business men&. For the present we will resume the plan proposed at the outset, of taking each township separately.

JACKSON TOWNSHIP,

Lying in the same tier of Townships east and west, with Newville and Concord, and joining the latter;—will first claim our attention, not from priority of settlement, but from its location. This is a full congressional township, and, of course, six miles square. Taken as a whole, in point of natural advantages, it is inferior perhaps to many of the other townships, though there are parts of it fully equal to any other portions of the county. There is much swampy land in it, and a considerable amount of heavy clay soil. The swamps, however, are about all susceptible of being drained, and, when ditched, will make the best of grass or corn land; and the clay lands are very good for grass and when properly tilled, for wheat and rye.

Dr. Chamberlain has sold his fancy horse, Grey Frank, to a man from Connecticut.

Young men with their gals, who enjoy a fine odor, should go to the cemetery, of a Sunday. Sometimes it is quite odoriferous.

Mr. Pepple, supervisor of a district between here and Waterloo, is complimented on the good road he has constructed. It has been scraped and leveled until it is the best piece of road in the county.

Several stores at Waterloo were entered one night last week by burglars, and articles taken therefrom. It does not seem to have been a very desperate effort to steal.

One G. G. Smith, of Huntington, has sued the Democrat of that place for libel, which goes to show that the fools are not all dead yet. No doubt he has been touched where he lives, and he winces.— Smith will find out before he gets through that it is a poor way to create public opinion in his favor.

We are in receipt of the News, a new daily paper started at Fort Wayne by Messrs. Page, Taylor & Co. Fort Wayne has long stood in need of a free and untrammeled press, and this will meet the demand. It is not a ring organ and therefore we believe its success is assured. It is already established on a good basis.

KILLED—We learn that a German by the name of Raut was killed last Sunday by a frieght train in Waterloo. He was walking on the main track and a train freight was going the same way on the side track, and the man thinking it was on the main one, without looking around stepped over to the side track, and was run over. He lived about three hours afterwards.

Coffees.

There has been a great reduction in coffees within the past few days, and the Fruit House has got the prices down to the lowest notch. Capt. White is now offering the best Rio at 25 cents, second best 23. The fact is the Captain is always ahead of everybody else, and it is known far and wide that his is the popular place in the city.

One of our printer boys, getting ten dollars ahead on his wages, lit out last Sunday night, leaving us short of help this week. We would like to have a smart, good-sized boy to learn the trade. Parents should see that their boys acquire a good trade, and now here's a chance. We have had several boys to runaway but it generally happened that they were ahead of their wages. A good boy from the country desired.

GRAND FESTIVAL.

The Catholic denomination will give a Festival on next Tuesday evening, in the Ensley Block, 2nd floor. They will have Strawberries, Ice-cream, &c., and we hope they will receive a liberal patronage from our citizens, as the proceeds are to go toward building a new church. Men are at work at the entetprise now, and we hope to see an early completion. Every little helps.

From Druggists.

There is no case of Dyspepsia that Green's August Flower will not cure. Come to the Drug Store of Davenport & Co., and inquire about it. If you suffer from costiveness, Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Indigestion, Liver Complaint, or derangement of the System, try it. Two or three doses will relieve you.

Boschee's German Syrup is now sold in every townand City in the United States. We have not less than five hundred letters from Druggists, saying it is the best medicine they ever sold for Consumption, Throat or Lung disease. 75 cents per bottle.

The Germans of Fort Wayne are having a high time over a speech made by Rev Mr. Marine at Defiance, in which he is said to have spoken in no complimentary terms of that nationality. They have held several indignation meetings. The report of the speech as printed in the Defiance Democrat seems to have been garbled, and Mr. Marine has received certificates from citizens there to prove this We believe the Democrat manufactured this report in order to make political capital. We denounce such trickery let it come from whatever party it may. If the Democracy cannot win any other way than by such despicable means, it would be more honorable to loose. We do not think their indignation meeting will be prolific of much good, especially when led on and incited by such demagogues as are at the head of it.

Return of the Indiana Editors.

A Magnificent Excursion.

After having a most enjoyable time in Philadelphia we started for New York about three o'clock Thursday evening and arrived in time for supper at the Fifth Avenue Hotel. Geo. Francis Train and Eli Perkins, whose other name is M. D. Landon, were there to greet us and after supper we were invited to attend Barnum's Roman Hippodrome that night. Seats had been reserved for us, and it was not long before we were enjoying the grand features of this institution. The great showman has in this his latest, not, let us hope, his last enterprise fairly out shown all his previous efforts. He has revolutionised the circus and given us something far better. We can well afford to miss the wide-mouthed grins of the clown, and the old ring jokes: we can even bear with resignation the absence of the ring-master and the orthodox circular track, when such excellent substitutes are provided.— We do not believe that any living man except Barnum could have invented and done so much in so short a time. He felt that the novelty was wanted, and his experience and energy enabled him to supply just what was needed. The performances in the Hippodrome are marvels of order and arrangement. The building is exactly suited to the purpose for which it was intended. The seats are so well placed that every one within the vast structure can see all that is going on. The long rows of gaslights and the sea of heads are alone worth a journey to 26th street. Night after night the place is crowded, rain or sunshine, the audience is equally large, and judging from appearances the popularity of the great show will endure as long as the doors of the Hippodrome are open. The great feature in the performance is variety. Not only is the performance frequently altered, but it is impossible, illogical as it sounds, that the same performances can ever be identical. The Great Congress of Nations, with which the programme opens is a very pretty spectacle. The chariots are superb with gold and filagree work, and the horses are well matched and handsomely caparisoned. The costumes of the men and women, who represent for the time being the most august personages of the civilized and uncivilized worlds, are rich and appropriate. This opening scene is always received with loud and prolonged applause, and is well worthy of it. But the real business of the evening does not begin until all the potentates have retired into temporary obscurity.— Then the band strikes up a lively air, and the vast arena is filled with men in scarlet liveries running hither and thither to clear the track for the races. These we shall not attempt to describe. It is sufficient to say that they are run in good earnest amid the greatest excitement, and that the best riders and drivers win. There are two-horse and four-horse chariot races, hurdle races and flat races. All are equally good. No small skill is required to guid a heavy chariot around an oval track so as to avoid collisions, especially when the horses are stretched in a hard galop. The four-horsed chariot race at Barnum's is especially worthy of mention as an exhibition of skill and daring on the part of the drivers. The hurdle races, too, are most exciting and elicit loud plaudits. The hurdles are of the usual size, and the horses seem to be as delighted as their riders as they clear them, almost in their stride. Barnum has acted with his usual judgement in the matter. The horses are not only well trained, but well-bred, and no element in the excitement of the race track is wanting. But the racing is only a small part of the performaces. The French Hercules Joiguarey, performs marvelous feats of strength, playing with the great dumbbells which two ordinary men can scarcely move, and lifting a horse and rider from the ground to the evident astonishment of the former. The trapeze performances are the best that have been seen in this city for some time, and Loyal's gymnastic feats are performed with an easy grace which makes them appear the simplest things in the world. The imitation of the race in the Corso at Rome is very good, and the two horses enjoy the fun almost as much as the spectators.

Then there are camel races and monkey races and wheel-barrow races and many other things which we have not time to specify. The exhibition is, in all respects, the best of its kind ever seen in State and can be enjoyed by the old as heartily as by the young.

Mr. Sartoris and wife arrived the same evening from Washington and were quartered at this hotel. The next morning we met these two notables on the stairs and they both looked very happy. Nelly is not a pretty girl, and is not credited with being very accomplished, but it said of her that she very frequently visited the poor at home, and made them presents of things needful and this alone should gain for her a warm friendship from the people.

Sartoris is young, foppish looking, with nothing but his reputed wealth to recommend him. It is even now hinted that he is not so rich as at first supposed. He is said to be one of the boys when he gets out and likes his 'alf and alf. We heard one or two at Washington express their regrets that Nellie had made such a choice, on this account. The party kept to their rooms pretty closely during their stay. Gen. Grant and wife arrived on Friday, and on Saturday the happy wedding party embarked on the steamer Baltic for England. There was a great crowd on hand at the hotel when they departed, but it was not there so much from a desire to do them homage, as to satisfy an idol curiosity. During the four days stay in this splendid city we visited most of the notable points in and about the metropolis. The first place was the Graphic office to see the new process by which they give daily illustrations of passing events in this popular journal. We were conducted to the old residence of Alexander Hamilton on Greenwich-st., by our friend Ras Chittenden and saw the ground at Bladenburg where the duel was fought between Hamilton and Burr. Saturday Central park was opened with music by Dodsworth's band. This is the most beautiful park in the world, and a ride over the grounds is a most enjoyable feature. Thousands of vehicles were out, from a one horse rig to a four in hand. The main reservior that supplies the city with water is located here, covering a hundred and six acres, filled with blue, clear water to the depth of 38 feet This park is the great feature of the city and affords more pleasure to the stranger than any other within its limits.

Sunday morning we went over and heard Bro. Beecher. There is nothing grand or imposing about Plymouth Church, being quite an ordinary structure It is of good size, but not large enough to accommodate all who would like to hear this great Divine. We were furnished seats, thanks to Mr. Eggleston, author of the Hoosier School Master. We disposed ourselves in a comfortable way and took solid comfort in listening to the sermon— He is not over estimated as a preacher, and is certainly a great man in his way. He made a very able address, and was quite eloquent in its delivery. After service we repaired to the lecture room where he met and greeted us with a cordial shake of the hand. We had not time to interview him on the Tilden affair, but don't think there is much in it from the way his neighbors turn out to hear him. We also heard Dr. Tyng in the evening who is also a very learned doctor of Divinity.

We indulged in the luxury of a ride down Broadway on the top of an omnibus as one must do to get a fair idea of the busy scenes daily enacted on this thoroughfare. This was on Saturday, and the Monday following the drivers of these vehicles struck for $3 a day, and for several days but few 'buses were to be seen. Broadway without her omnibuses would be like playing the play Hamlet with that character left out. We also had the pleasure of eating oysters on the half shell which we had just seen fished from the bay. They are already enjoying such delicacies as ripe peaches, watermelons &c which is somewhat in advance of us.— There are many points of interest to be seen in the Empire city, and we were particularly fortunate in having the services of E. L. Chittenden, Esq., of Fort Wayne, who was born and raised in the city and knew where to take us, to see the elephant

On Monday evening we started on the steamer Providence for Boston, passing down Long Island Sound, and reaching the ocean at Newport. In the morning we were safely landed at the hub and had all day to make an inspection of the city. The burnt district has been entirely rebuilt, with fairer buildings than ever was erected there before, though they failed to make some of the crooked streets straight.

For narrow, twisty, winding streets, Boston takes the lead. We started out from the U. S. Hotel, on our own hook for a short walk, and after going some dozen squares or more, as we thought, we ask a policeman where the United States Hotel was and he showed it to us just across the street. They make some turns in the streets so short that the tops of the houses on each side of the street touch each other.

Beautiful Boston, with all thy faults we love thee still. We visited Bunkerhill Monument, Harvard College and lesser points of interest. We returned by the same steamer during the night to New York.

We returned by the way of Philadelphia and Pittsburg getting a beautiful moonlight view of the scenery in crossing the mountains on the Pennsylvania Central Railroad.

We had good weather all the way, and no excursion to any other point of the country affords so many attractive features as this did. Mr. Ainsworth our manager did so excellently well in making his arrangements for our enjoyment, that he was presented with a gold-headed cane, at Washington, by the party, and it was well merited.

We cannot forget to mention favorably the man with the pocket-ful of speeches, our good looking President, J. T. Bryer, Esq., of the Logansport Journal. He is a most genial and pleasant gentleman, and in a speech knocks our tin roof speech into the shade.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

JUDGE STOWE, of the Common Pleas Court of Pittsburgh, has reversed the judgment of the Mayor in the case of the female crusaders, who were arrested, and ordered the fines to be refunded. The ladies, of course, are wildly jubilant over their victory, and will resume their crusading operations.

J. EDGAR THOMPSON, President of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, died in Philadelphia, on the 28th ult., of Bright's disease of the kidneys.

NINETY-SEVEN aspirants for military honors presented themselves at West Point at the June examination. Of this number thirty-two were sent back home because they could not write, spell or cipher, or were not familiar with maps or grammar. The colored applicants all failed....In the investigation into the Mill river disaster, Bassett, the dam-contractor, admitted that even the definite specifications for the construction of the dam were not adhered to, and that himself and his partner entered on the work in the belief that the dam might give way, even if built according to the specifications....The Springfield (Mass.) Republican figures up the total losses by the Mill river disaster at $1,200,000.

PETER H. WATSON has determined to resign the Presidency of the Erie railway....Thomas A. Scott succeeds J. Edgar Thompson (deceased) as President of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company....The bodies of all but four of the victims of the Mill river disaster have been recovered....President Grant, on the 2d inst., laid the corner-stone of the American Museum of Natural History at Central Park, New York. The building is to be twenty-five feet longer than the National Capitol at Washington, and will cost $6,000,000....A shocking tragedy was enacted in New York a few days ago. Mrs. Michael Dwyer, while laboring under a temporary fit of insanity, murdered her three children, aged 7, 4 and 2 years, by mashing their heads to a jelly with a flat-iron, and mortally wounded her husband by cleaving his skull with a cooper's adz.

THE Board of Education of Brooklyn, after investigating the subject fully, has come to the conclusion that the co-education of the sexes, if not positively immoral, is fraught with great danger, and therefore recommends the abolition of the system.

The West.

ADVICES from the West report the Cheyenne Indians on the war-path, and a lively campaign is predicted for the summer.

THERE are now organized in Michigan 430 Granges of the Patrons of Husbandry....The following returns from the census of 1874 evidences the healthy growth of Michigan cities and towns: Grand Rapids, complete, except two wards, 26,000; Flint, except one ward, 8,108, against 5,386 in 1870; Big Rapids, 3,063, against 1,237 in 1870; Coldwater, 4,313, against 4,381 in 1870; Greenville City, 4,150; Lapeer, 2,886, against 1,776 in 1870; Port Huron, 8,240, against 5,977 in 1870....Mr. and Mrs. Warren McDowell and two of their children, living near Saugatuck, Mich., ate of a raw ham, of their own raising, and were shortly after attacked with the fatal disease. Mrs. McDowell died Sunday and her husband Tuesday of last week. The children at last accounts were also considered in a dangerous condition....Medical science has achieved another triumph by an operation which was successfully performed in Chicago the other day. The event referred to was nothing less than the direct transfusion of blood from a lamb into the veins of a man in the last stages of consumption, a full report of which is published in the papers of that city. Twenty-five minutes after the operation the patient recovered so far as to regain his usual pulse and was feeling well. He conversed freely with his wife, who went in to see him, and appeared in excellent spirits. The operation is pronounced successful in every respect, and the final result will be watched with much anxiety by the medical profession....Jack Evans is a genuine hero if there ever was one. Jack runs an engine on the Burlington and Missouri River Branch road. The other day, approaching Farragut, between Hamburg and Red Oak, Iowa, he discovered a child on the track some sixty yards distant. He rushed out upon the cow-catcher, and when the engine had reached within ten feet of the child, whose arms were raised, made a leap, grasped the child, and the two rolled down the embankment. The child was uninjured, Jack receiving severe, though not serious, injury of the ankle for his heroic effort.

THE National Crop Reporter of the 1st inst. publishes deductions from the estimates of correspondents in relation to the total of spring and winter wheat now in the ground in the States of Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Ohio, and Wisconsin, which indicate an average increase in the total area of wheat of 8 2-10 per cent. The increase is 14 per cent. in Illinois, 1 8-10 per cent. in Indiana, 18 5-10 per cent. in Iowa, 24 per cent. in Kansas, 3 7-10 per cent. in Minnesota, 17 4-10 per cent. in Missouri, 5 per cent. in Ohio, and 4 4-10 per cent. in Wisconsin....The residence of Robert Jones, a farmer, living near Zanesville, O., was destroyed by fire on the 30th ult. and three children were burned to death....Five men were instantly killed on the 30th ult., in the Consolidate Amador mine, Sutter Creek, Cal., by the falling of a cage in the mine....Madison (Wis.) telegram of June 1: "Crops in this region are looking magnificently. The growth of grass, small grains, and corn, is wonderful."....If reports from the West are to be believed, a general Indian war is imminent....A Fort Madison (Iowa) dispatch says spring and winter wheat are looking better than for years past. Corn is doing finely, is sixteen inches high, and is being plowed for the first time. Oats well up. Fruit promising a good yield....The Detroit Free Press of the 1st inst. publishes crop reports from all parts of Michigan, showing a generally promising condition of affairs. Wheat is usually good, although water-killed somewhat in some sections. Oats are unusually abundant, and other grains fair. Potatoes are thrifty, but threatened with bugs. The fruit prospects are excellent.

THE extensive boot and shoe house of M. D. Wells & Co., Chicago, has been destroyed by fire. Loss $350,000.

P. P. WINTERMUTE has been tried at Yankton, Dakota, for the murder of Gen. McCook, in September last, and found guilty of manslaughter in the first degree....Prof. Patton has prepared his appeal to the Presbyterian Synod of Illinois from the decision of the Chicago Presbytery in the case of Prof. Swing. The reasons for appealing are grouped by him under five heads: (1) Irregularities in the proceedings. (2) Hurrying to a decision before important testimony was taken. (3) Prejudice. (4) Mistake. (5) Injustice.

The South.

THERE is much excitement in Tennessee relative to the probable passage of the Civil Rights bill, and its effect upon the common school system of the State. The State Superintendent of Public Instruction has issued a circular to the district authorities, recommending that no contracts or engagements be made with teachers until the fate of the bill is determined. He asserts that the bill as it now stands is in direct conflict with the State Constitution and school laws, and that school officers have no alternative but to obey the latter as they have sworn to do. In order, therefore, to avoid a conflict between Congressional and State enactments the discontinuance of schools is advised....Chief State Engineer Thompson, in a letter to Gov. Kellogg, of Louisiana, says 5,000,000 cubic yards of levee are required to be built to save the State from overflow next year; that Louisiana cannot pay for the construction of more than a third, and suggests an appeal for national aid....Three County Commissioners of Barnwell county, S. C., have been convicted of corruption and sentenced respectively to ten years, nine years, and thirteen months in the Penitentiary.

THE Mayor of New Orleans has addressed another urgent appeal to the people of the North for aid for the Louisiana sufferers, in which he says: "A deadly famine in Louisiana would be a national disgrace, which the wealth and philanthropy of America must prevent at all hazards."

LOUISIANIANS now in Washington state that the damage to many of the levees which occurred during the war has never been repaired. They further declare that the ravages of the late flood upon the whole levee system are utterly impossible of repair by the impoverished people, and that reconstruction can only be accomplished through national aid. Senator Alcorn proposes that the Government shall undertake the rebuilding of the levees, and thus furnish labor to people whose crops are destroyed. This course will insure the next and future crops, and will stay the impending famine. It is estimated that 5,000,000 cubic yards of levees, costing $5,000,000, will be required.

Washington.

GEN. GARFIELD, Chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations, stated to a Washington correspondent, the other day, that the appropriations for this year have been cut down fully $30,000,000 below the estimates, and that he has assurance that there will be no deficit in the revenues for the current fiscal year. The total revenue receipts for the year, up to the 1st inst., were $93,181,014....A strong effort is being made to bring the celebrated claim of George Chorpenning before the Court of Claims. The House Judiciary Committee has reported in favor of it....Cannon, the Mormon Apostle's, legislative career is about to be nipped in the bud. The House Committee on Elections have decided to report in favor of his expulsion.

IT is not considered probable that the present Congress will take any action on the postal telegraph question....After a lapse of nine years, the payment to the officers and sailors of the navy of what are known as the Farragut prize-moneys has at last been commenced....It seems to be pretty generally accepted that Congress will adjourn at the time set—June 22....The Secretary of the Treasury has directed the Assistant Treasurer at New York to sell $5,000,000 of gold during June.

SECRETARY RICHARDSON has resigned the Treasury portfolio, and is succeeded by Gen. Benjamin F. Bristow, of Kentucky. The President subsequently nominated Richardson as Judge of the Court of Claims. Banfield, Solicitor of the Treasury, also tendered his resignation, which was accepted. Bristow is a lawyer of prominence, is 41 years old, and a native Kentuckian.

THE contents of the late Senator Sumner's house at Washington were sold at auction last week. The attendance of those anxious to obtain some memento of the departed statesman was large, and the bidding spirited.

General.

IN the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church North, at St. Louis, fraternal overtures from the Old School Synod of Missouri were received the other day. This Synod was connected with the Old School branch of the Church previous to the reunion of 1869. It refused to acquiesce in the basis upon which the Old and New Schools agreed, on the ground that it recognized too distinctly the supremacy of the civil power. Since then concessions have been made on both sides, and the Synod has voted to give in its adherence to the Assembly.

Running "Amok."

A correspondent of the London Daily News writes from Batavia:

"From Sourabaija we have just received intelligence of one of the most terrible instances of an "Amok" murder which has ever occurred in an Indian Archipelago. The murderer was an escaped convict, and the scene of the wholesale slaughter committed by this one man is Terna, a small island not far from Sourabaija. The fellow went on the afternoon of Jan. 13 to the bazaar in the chief town of the island, where he bought some tobacco. He there drew his knife and attacked every one—man, woman and child—within his reach, wounding and killing nineteen persons in less time than it takes to mention it. He then made his escape into the thick jungle which begins at the back of the town and runs up to the densely wooded hills. Of these nineteen wounded persons fifteen are dead, some killed outright, others lingering on for a day or two. For ten days this ruffian remained at large, to the great fear of the town and neighborhood, few daring to venture out after dusk, and one and all shunning the 'passer' or bazaar. During these ten days, regular, volunteer and native troops were all called out, scouring the woods and jungles. He was finally captured, after wounding three of his pursuers, who were armed natives sent out by the Sultan of Terna. So irate were his captors that, after chopping off his head, they literally cut his body into mincemeat.

"The Malays are a strange mixture of child and tiger—harmless in a general way and given to childlike pleasures; but, their passions once aroused, they become very fiends in their thirst for blood. Jealousy is the most frequent cause by far of their 'Amoks.' A gang of one hundred to two hundred convicts may often be met with on the public roads here, unattended by any but a few unarmed native guards or jailers; the convicts themselves frequently carrying axes, heavy wood-knives, etc. Though twenty to thirty per cent. of these are probably murderers—a percentage nearly doubled in Sumatra—yet as they march along they laugh and talk like a parcel of schoolboys; and should one of them be the happy possessor of a ragged handkerchief tied flag-fashion to the end of a pole, he is admired and envied by all of them. It is rarely that drink or opium—both forbidden indulgences by their religion—helps to aid their murderous frenzy."

THE selling of fraudulent "extras," or "bogus news," has been lately punished in New York, the victim being one Mr. Bradley, whose particular offense was rushing along the street, shouting at the top of his voice, "Extra!—Great Outbreak in Europe!—Fifty Lives Lost!" Five cents had been paid for the paper, and, not liking to be victimized in this way, the party aggrieved caused the arrest of Mr. Bradley, who was sentenced to the penitentiary for six months.

"OUT OF THE HURLY BURLY."—This is the name of a book full of the richest humor, by Max Adeler. It is bound to be very popular, both on account of its humor and its superb illustrations, of which there are some 350. We advise those who wish to "laugh and grow fat" to buy a copy, for such is its effect.

Compulsory Education in New York.

The Empire State has made education compulsory. The law to that effect comes into force Jan. 1, 1875. It contains ten sections. The first provides that every child between the ages of 8 and 14 years, not physically or mentally incapable of study, shall be instructed, at home or in school, at least fourteen weeks in each year, eight of which shall be consecutive, in spelling, reading, writing, English grammar, geography and arithmetic. The only study in this list to which objection can be made is grammar. The best educators are beginning to drop it. The second section forbids, under penalty of $50 fine, the employment during school-hours of any child who has not attended school fourteen weeks of the preceding year. The third directs School-Trustees to examine the manufactories of their district, in order to see whether this rule is obeyed. The fourth is unimportant. The fifth authorizes Trustees to enforce the preceding sections, and fixes the fines for keeping children from school at $1 for the first and $5 for each succeeding week. These fines cannot, however, be collected for more than thirteen weeks. The sixth section empowers Trustees to supply text-books to poor children. The seventh provides that children shall be classed as habitual truants on the written statement of their parents that they cannot make them go to school. The eighth gives Trustees and Boards of Education the power to make rules, subject to the approval of a Justice of the Supreme Court for the District, for catching, confining, and teaching habitual truants. The ninth settles questions of jurisdiction. The tenth provides that two weeks' attendance at a half-time or evening-school shall be counted as one week at a day-school.—Chicago Tribune.

A WONDERFUL NEGRO.—They have got a colored man in Troy, N. Y., the seventh son of a seventh daughter, who has the faculty of moving the walls of his abdomen; shifting his ribs directly over his bowels; changing the position of the heart and the right breast, and suspending the pulse and heart-beats. In addition to these abnormal feats, he has traveled all over the world; has been awarded a diploma at the Edinburgh Medical University; speaks French, German, Portuguese, Hottentot and Hebrew; has had two wives and twelve children; bends a bar of iron seventh-eighths of an inch in thickness, over his fore-arm; and has fought twice in the prize-ring. If there is anything else that this wonderful negro can do, it is not narrated; but what little he can do is only another proof of the remarkable achievements of American genius and enterprise. It may be added that he has a brother in Paris who is six feet two inches high, and has the wonderful power of shutting himself up like a telescope to the height of three feet two inches.

THE courtesies which are extended to members of the press in life, by granting them special places in assemblages and during the occurrence of public events, it seems are not to be denied them even in death. The Trustees of a New York cemetery, Cypress Hill, have appropriated a plat, with room for 360 graves, for the interment of members of the New York press—complimentary. It is well enough to state that, with their usual promptness in such cases, the gift has been acknowledged by the journalists of the city. It is by no means the first time that dead-heads have been taken in by a cemetery.

The New York Ledger's History.

Many of the greatest successes achieved in life are accidental in their orgin. Robert Bonner's was of this sort. The Ledger was begun by a broken merchant who had hoped to get a livelihood by making the paper commercially interesting to people out of town.

Bonner then owned a small printing office, receiving so much a week for doing the composition of the Ledger. The ex-merchant, having invented a printing press, from which he had great expectations, determined to sell his journal in order to devote his entire time to his invention. Bonner, fearing he would lose his job if the weekly changed hands, decided (1851) as a stroke of business to purchase it himself. After he had done so, he imagined himself possessed of an elephant. By way of change, he slowly dropped the commercial features of the sheet, and substituted miscellany therefor. The circulation increased a little, when somewhat encouraged thereby, he engaged Mrs. Sigourney to write for the Ledger, and she continued to the end of her days.

Two years later (1855) he made an arrangement with Fanny Fern, then very popular, and went so far as to give her $100 a column for an original story. About the same time he began to advertise very extensively, and he soon saw that the foundation of his fortune was made. Edward Everett was paid $10,000 for his Mount Vernon papers, and all the notable journalists and authors he could secure were munificently remunerated. He gave Beecher $25,000 for "Norwood" and a like sum to Greeley for his "Recollections of a Busy Life."

No man has ever advertised so recklessly as Bonner has, and no man has ever profited so largely by advertising. He once paid the Herald $25,000 for a single advertisement; he has paid $30,000 in a week, and $200,000 in a year; which is all the more remarkable, from the fact that the Ledger has not, never has had, and probably never will have, a single line of advertising of any kind. —New York Letter.

The Word "Canard."

The origin of the word canard (French for duck) when used to signify some unfounded story, is not generally known. The following are the terms in which M. Guetelet relates, in the Annuaire de l'Academie, the manner in which the word became used in a new sense: "To give a sky lift at the ridiculous pieces of intelligence which the journals are in the habit of publishing every morning, Cornelison stated that an interesting experiment had just been calculated to prove the extraordinary voracity of ducks. Twenty of these animals had been placed together, and one of them having been killed and cut up into the smallest possible pieces, feathers and all, and thrown to the other nineteen, had been gluttonously gobbled up in an exceedingly short space of time.

"Another was taken from nineteen, and being chopped small like its predecessor, was served up to eighteen, and at once devoured like the other; and so on to the last, who was thus placed in the position of having eaten his nineteen companions in a wonderfully short time. All this, most pleasantly narrated, obtained a success which the writer was far from anticipating, for the story ran the rounds of all the journals in Europe. It then became almost forgotten for about a score of years, when it came back from America, with amplification which it did not boast of at the commencement, and with a regular certificate of the autopsy of the body of the surviving animal, whose œsophagus was declared to have been found seriously injured. Every one laughed at the history of the canard thus brought up again, but the word retains its novel significance."

Tale of a Cat.

The following cat story is told by a correspondent of Land and Water: "I was calling at the house of a friend at Bredwardine, in Herefordshire, where I witnessed the most singular behavior of a favorite cat. I must first mention that my friend told me that they had wondered very much, after their 5 o'clock tea, that the cream left in a small glass jug disappeared, without their being able to find out how. They suspected the cat, but did not know how she could do it, as the mouth of the jug was too small for her to lap it, and there were no marks of spilt cream on the tray. They determined to watch, and one day they discovered the clever manner in which the robbery was accomplished. My friend said she would allow me to see the performance, though it was not a good plan to encourage the cat's theft. She placed a handkerchief on the rug, and put the cream jug on it, and called the cat to the spot, who sat down very leisurely by the side of the jug and commenced her operations in the most graceful manner imaginable, dipping her paw into the narrow mouth of the cream jug and licking the cream off. She went on dipping her paw in this manner until the jug was emptied, when she set to work to clean her paw and face thoroughly, and was evidently conversant with her genteel method of drinking cream."

Charity vs. Poverty.

From the fact that it has been preached as a religious duty, people have sometimes looked upon it rather as a training ground for their own benefit than in its effects on others. Many people look on the poorer classes as allowed by a wise discretion of Providence to exist in order that the rich may have a means of saving their own souls. Poverty is not looked upon as an evil remediable by the better organization of social relations and by the reformation of individual character, but as a necessary evil, designed as aforesaid to benefit the leisurely by giving them cases by which they may perfect themselves in spiritual medicine. It is in the attempt to practice on the poor, to try and do ourselves good by being kind to them, that so much mischief has arisen. It is this which has made some kindness so distasteful to the poor that one woman said, when she heard that her visitor was ill: "Poor lady, I am sorry for her; but there's one comfort—she's a lady; she won't have to be read to and prayed over."

FARM AND HOME.

Practical Suggestions.

A BLOATED animal may be relieved, so they say, by administering half a teacupful of finely-powdered charcoal, well mixed in a bottle of water.

PASCHALL MORRIS, of the Practical Farmer, says he puts a quietus upon cut-worms in corn fields by placing "a tablespoonful of salt on each hill after it is planted and before it is up."

SO LONG as dairymen travel through the country, pick out the best milkers, and keep them for milk till they grow old without raising a single calf, no improvement of our milking stock need be expected.

AN experienced onion-raiser drives maggots from his growing crop by forming a shallow trench with the corner of his hoe alongside the infested bulbs, and pouring in suds made by dissolving two or three gallons of soft soap in a barrel of water, previously adding one pound of copperas to the soap.

OIL and repair the harness. Unbuckle all the parts and wash clean with soft water, soap and brush. A little turpentine or benzine will take off any gummy substance which the soap fails to remove. Then warm the leather, and, as soon as dry on the surface, apply the oil with a paint brush or a swab. Neat's-foot oil is the best. Hang up the harness in a warm place, to dry, but do not let it burn.

DR. DICKIE told the Doylestown Club that he keeps lice from his hen-house "by hanging up near the roosting-place an old piece of clothe saturated with coal oil or carbonic acid." Mr. Barber recommended a free use of water by means of a hose. Mr. Tergo cures bad cases by "applying coal oil about the roost, and then setting fire to the oil." Mr. McNair destroyed the parasites by application of fish brine with a whitewash brush.

ONE poultry-fancier cured chicken cholera by feeding every other day for two weeks bran mash, in which was a liberal dose of the common garden pepper. One old biddy was determined to die. She was crouched in an out-of-the-way spot. He sought her, gave her a whole pepper in doses an hour apart, kept her in a warm place, and in the course of a few days she gave notice that she could take care of herself.—Exchange.

TO MAKE grafting wax, take five parts of rosin, one part of beeswax, one part of tallow. Melt these in a skillet, tin cup, or metal vessel; the skillet being preferable, as it can be handled better, and the wax keeps warm longer in it. Melt these over the fire and mix together well. When the scions are set—say as many as twenty or thirty, or as few as are wished—have the mixture ready and apply it warm, with a small wooden paddle. See that every part is covered and the air completely excluded. It requires no bandage.

LUCIUS DUNBAR, of West Bridgewater, Mass., tells the Poultry Bulletin that he has never failed, in a long experience, to cure roup in fowls by the use of "solution of chlorinated soda." He takes four or five drops of it in a teaspoonful of cold water and turns it down the throat while another person holds the bill open. It is also well to wash the bill and nostrils thoroughly (if the entire head gets soaked so much the better) with warm water containing a few drops of the same drug, afterward rinsing it out of the eyes of the bird. In bad cases it may be necessary to administer the treatment two or three times daily for several days.

ECONOMY may be practiced in a thousand ways, and one way is in our fuel. Wood that has been sunned a few days after cutting and splitting it, and then housed four months or more, is worth for the family purposes of warming, cooking and washing, almost twice as much as when green. But few farmers realize the value of dry wood, especially during the winter season, and hence but little wood is stored during the summer. Be sure to furnish plenty of oven wood. This should be piled in a part of the wood-house by itself. It will promote kindly feeling in the family—will save time otherwise lost in kindling fire with green wood. Then let us prepare a good supply of dry wood for winter, full six months before wanted for use.

SOME timely hints relative to the sowing of clover were given at a meeting of a farmers' club in Scotland. The speaker said that owing to the small size of the seeds a large proportion of them are buried too deeply and fail to germinate. It had been found by experiment that the greatest success with red clover is attained when the seed is covered with only half an inch of soil; when covered one and a half inches deep, fifty per cent. of the seeds germinate, but at a depth of two inches not a single plant appeared. White clover will not show above the surface if the seeds are covered one and a half inches deep, and at three-quarters of an inch only fifty per cent. of the seeds produce plants. It is necessary, therefore, to prepare carefully a soil for clover and to sow and cover it with discretion. Rolling helps to secure a fine seed bed, and consequently an even distribution.

A POTATO culturist says he was educated to plant three or four good-sized tubers in a hill, but, much against his judgment, he was finally induced to cut the seed, and for seven years past has been cutting closer and closer each season, until now he cuts as near as possible to single eyes, and plants in rows three feet apart and ten or twelve inches in the row. His success has been greater since he adopted this plan. Each spring he sells from half an acre of land 100 bushels of surplus, having used liberally in his family during winter, and reserved enough for seed. He prefers Early Rose, and his soil and his tillage are excellent. Another experimenter records in the American Rural Home that he placed large and small potatoes in juxtaposition in the same row, and in adjoining rows, and found that, when planting was followed by moist and favorable weather, there was but little difference in results; but when a drought followed the large potatoes took the lead, and held it through the season, yielding much larger crops.

Household Hints.

BY sifting flour over the raisins and currants and rubbing it over them well, there will be no trouble from the sinking of them in the cake.

BAKING-POWDER is a perfect substitute for soda and cream tartar. The amount to be used is always given with the directions accompanying each box.

SUNDERLAND PUDDING.—One pint sweet milk, three eggs, one pint of flour, two teaspoonfuls salt, mix together, and bake in cup; raisins if you like.

COMMON COOKIES.—One cup of butter, two cups of sugar, one coffee-cup of butter-milk and sour cream, one teaspoonful saleratus, flour, flavor with nutmeg.

CLOTHES which are put into boiling water when washed will certainly become yellow. They should be allowed to come to a boil slowly and boil twenty minutes.

THE best thing to brighten tin is whiting and kerosene. Wet a bit of flannel in the kerosene, then dip it into the powder, and rub with a will, and your tin will shine like a mirror.

BOSTON SUET-PUDDING.—One cup of suet, chopped fine, one cup of molasses, one cup of milk, three cups and a half flour, one cup raisins, one teaspoonful soda, two teaspoonfuls cream tartar, one teaspoonful cloves.

SHREWSBURY CAKE.—Three-quarters of a pound of flour; three-quarters of a pound of sugar, half pound of butter, five eggs, soda or not, as you choose; they keep better without. Bake in thin sheet, and cut up after they are baked.

BREAD CAKE.—Three cups of dough, three cups of sugar, one cup of butter, three eggs, one teaspoonful of saleratus (not dissolved) kneaded into the dough, stir in one cup of flour, mix the butter and sugar. Beat the yolks, and add the whites well beaten, then the dough, last the flour, spices, raisins; excellent.

A SOLUTION of oxalic acid rubbed over tarnished brass soon removes the tarnish, rendering the metal bright. The acid must be washed off with water, and the brass rubbed with whiting and soft leather. A mixture of muriatic acid and alum dissolved in water imparts a golden color to brass articles that are steeped in it for a few seconds.

ALL housekeepers have some time realized the difficulty of lighting a fire on a still, damp morning, when the chimney will not draw and vigorous blowing proves ineffectual. Science explains the trouble as "caused by the difficulty encountered in overcoming the inertia of the long column of air in the pipe or chimney by the small column of air that can be forced up through the interstices of wood and coal at the bottom of which the fire is kindled." This may be remedied by first lighting a few bits of shavings or paper placed upon the top; thus, by the heated air forcing itself into the chimney and establishing there an upward current, the room is kept free from the gas or smoke which is so apt to fill the room, and the fire can then be lighted from below with good success.

Chicago Brag.

What the United States are to the rest of the world, Chicago is to the United States. It is the concentrated essence of Americanism. The peculiar state or temper of the human mind in which material growth and extension are its only objects, and all its forces are concentrated with the utmost intensity on these, has never been so perfectly developed as in the United States; and if we were asked what city in that country showed that temper in its most energetic form, we might possibly think once of Boston or New York, but should certainly relinquish them for Chicago. Just as the United States are the newest of great nations, so Chicago is the newest of great cities; and as the States look forward to an almost indefinite increase of wealth and population in the future, so Chicago expects in its own mind to become the biggest and richest city on earth. In this condition of temper and feeling, it is not surprising that we should hear a good deal of exultation. A people very busy and prosperous, and just enough educated to be capable of reading and writing incessantly about itself in a multitude of cheap periodical publications, is sure to develop a continual supply of brag. Such a people is very much in a condition that is known to us by specimens in our own country, the condition of the clever and active Manchester or Bedford man who, beginning with nothing but native strength and ability and a very little elementary education, fights his way to a brilliant material success, and naturally looks back upon his career with a self-complacency that expresses itself in boasting. American brag has been long quite familiar to us; and we imagine that there must be a use for it, that it must have been ordained among the inscrutable intentions of nature. It acts no doubt as a stimulus, and keeps the Americans well up to their work. The Americans are like very strong boys who are always wanting to show off their strength, and who look upon every piece of physical labor to be done as an opportunity for athletic displays. We really believe that when Chicago was burned down the inhabitants inwardly chuckled over the calamity as the finest possible opportunity for proving to the world the pluck and energy that were in them. The building of a new city was a match against time. So they set to work as if they had made bets with all other cities that they would rebuild Chicago in a couple of years, and they labored all along with the idea that they were watched by the whole world.—London Saturday Review.

A CHINESE COOK.—The Visalia (Cal.) Delta relates the following: "A friend of ours was bragging one day of a new Chinaman cook whose service he had the good luck to secure. Everything went beautifully for a week or two, till one day he chanced to glance into the kitchen through a crack in the door, where John was busy mixing the bread. Before him stood a dish of water from which to moisten the flour. He saw John draw up a mouthful and spurt it into the bread in the same manner as he blows it on the clothes while ironing. The Chinaman has doubtless gone into some hotel-kitchen where his services are more fully appreciated."

Making Others Miserable.

People who would faint to see a gush of blood, and who think themselves Christians, have a lively enjoyment in witnessing pain, and cultivate the art of inflicting it. The mention of a few of the methods employed will make good my remarks;

The delight with which many report bad news, the eagerness with which they report to people evil sayings which cannot but lacerate the feelings, show a morbid love of suffering. This is not the trait of real kindness of disposition. It is not anomalous, because it is so widely extended as to seem normal.

Some people scatter pain-producing elements thoughtlessly, and are surprised and sorry when they witness the suffering produced. Others do it for momentary pleasure, without meaning any serious results. But now and then we find persons who love to torment a victim. They enjoy another's sufferings. It is their happiness to see some one made keenly miserable by their lance-like tongue. They will smile, and talk in low, sweet tones, and shoot out quivering sentences, poison-tipped, and cast a look sideways to see if they strike, and at every sign of pain their face grows bright.

Those who in the main are striving to make friends happy will have one black thread in the web of white. Those who really love each other have a strange fondness for stirring each other up.

There is an innocent and even pleasure-producing method of rallying which, if deftly and gracefully done heightens the enjoyment of society. But life is full of the other sort. If Darwin is right in thinking that men ascended from monads by gradual evolution, then it is very certain that some men came up by the way of the mosquito, the flea and the biting fly, and that their ancestral traits still linger in the blood.—Henry Ward Beecher.

Useful Hints for the Home Circle.

VINEGAR and fruit stains upon knives can be removed by rubbing the blades with a raw potato prior to cleaning them for table use.

GOLD or silver embroidery may be cleaned with a sponge and warm alcohol. Dry and rub it well with soft, new canton-flannel.

THOSE who have tried it say that moistening the hands with glycerine at night, and sleeping with oil kid gloves on, will whiten as well as soften the skin.

IT is said that the old and rancid butter may be rendered palatable by washing it in water, to which a few drops of a solution of chloride of lime have been added.

THE best cordial for children is proper food; the finest sirup is thorough cleanliness, and the most efficacious of all "soothing" medicines is good management.

TO USE a paper-knife to cut open the leaves of a new book, keep your left hand firmly pressed down upon the open pages while you hold the knife in your right. This will prevent the edges of the leaves from cutting rough and jagged. Cut open the tops of the leaves before you run the knife up the side-edge, and cut with a short, quick, hard stroke. The most serviceable paper-knives are of ivory, and without a handle—the handles being very apt to break.

Touchy Husbands.

Women have their faults, it is true, and very provoking ones they sometimes are; but if we would all learn, men and women, that with certain virtues, which we all admire, are always coupled certain disagreeables, we might make up our minds more easily to accept the bitter with the sweet. For instance, every husband, we believe, delights in a cleanly, well-ordered house, free from dust, spots and unseemly stains; the pains-taking machinery necessary to keep it so he never wishes to see, or seeing, too often forgets to praise. If, then, his wife, true to her feminine instincts toward cleanliness, gently reminds him, when he comes home, that he has forgotten to use the door-mat before entering the sitting-room on a stormy day, let him reflect, before giving her a lordly, impatient, ungracious "pshaw!" how the reverse of the picture would suit him, viz.: A slatternly, "easy" woman, whose apartments are a constant mortification to him in the presence of visitors.

It is a poor return, when a wife has made everything fresh and bright, to be unwilling to take a little pains to keep it so, or to be properly reminded if forgetful on these points upon which many husbands are unreasonably "touchy," even while secretly admiring the pleasant results of the vigilance of the good house-mother.

IN the Senate of Massachusetts, last week, a resolution was offered to inquire what legislation is necessary to prevent the payment of fares by passengers in the cars of steam railroads. In support of the resolution a Senator stated that it grew out of confessions by conductors on the Eastern railroad that in a series of years they had taken from $150,000 to $300,000 annually, which they had put in their own pockets. Another Senator said the practice had long been known, with little hope of prevention. Mr. Banks opposed the resolution, and stated that it could not be expected that conductors would be more honest than the railroad corporations, and it was for them first to set a good example in not cheating the public, when the example would be followed.

THREE men and two boys lately floated for thirty-two days in the Indian ocean in a small boat before they were rescued. For the last eleven days they had neither food nor water, except that the mate shot a bird which chanced to fly over them. They chewed lead to moisten their throats, tried to eat their boots and jelly-fish, and in delirium sought to kill one another—inviting death. Blood from wounds in fray was eagerly drunk, but when the frenzy passed the men would shake hands and kiss each other. Lots were cast, and a boy in the boat doomed to be killed; but this the mate, who acted throughout most resolutely, prevented.

The Telegraph Around the World.

With the exception of direct lines from the western coast of America to Asia, the girdle which good-humored Puck was to put about the earth seems to have been completed—the forty minutes the little sprite claimed to accomplish his work has been quite verified by the events and the labor of the present age.

The wires of the telegraph are annihilating distance, aiding the laws, and bringing the nations of the earth into a companionship which compels a better understanding. We can read in the morning papers the Australian news of yesterday, coming by way of London, leaving there at 3 a. m. of to-day; the triumph of science and the testimony of success to energy and perseverance is complete. North, East, South and West—all are within a few hours' reach with the touch of instruments, and the steady tapping of the telegraphic signals breathes the wishes of the world and the news of national or financial import with unerring promptness. The slender girdle which the wires spread makes all mankind close neighbors, and the bond of union which civilization is each day riveting should make us truer friends and nobler toward each other.

WHOSE BOY IS THAT?—He may be seen any day, in almost any part of the village: he never makes room for you on the sidewalk, looks at you saucily and swears smartly if asked anything; he is very impudent, and often vulgar to ladies who pass; he delights in frightening and sometimes does serious injury to little boys and girls; he lounges at the street-corners, and is the first to arrive at a dog-fight or any other sport or scrape; he crowds into the postoffice in the evening, and multiplies himself and his antics at such a rate that people having legitimate business there are crowded out; he thinks himself very sharp, he is certainly very noisy; he can smoke and chew tobacco now and then, and rip out an oath most any time; we ask whose boy he is? Mother, is he yours? We think he is, for there are many good qualities in the lad, and we do not think that you know what he does on the street. Look after him, mother, keep him more at home. Train him, and you will have a son to be proud of.

THE SETTLERS OF NEBRASKA.—Mr. Samuel A. Echols, a Georgian, who has been spending some time in Nebraska, writes an interesting letter to the Atlanta (Ga.) Herald, in which he speaks highly of the climate of the young State. He makes the following remarks, with regard to the people: "The people of Nebraska are very different to my preconceived ideas of them. The State being new, I had expected to find in the settlers a rude class of society. I have never met, anywhere, a more intelligent, polite, or hospitable people than in this State. There is reason, too, for the existence of such a class of people here. The worst class of people go anywhere else than in agricultural sections, and particularly in this beautiful, open prairie country, unsuited to the habitation of those whose ways are dark. The crowded cities or fastnesses of the mountains and forests are better abodes for vicious men."

POSTOFFICE RULES.—Never buy any stamps. Hand your letter to the Postmaster and tell him to put a stamp on it. If you are out of change tell him you will hand it to him the next time you are in. It won't be necessary, however, to do so, as three cents are nothing.

When you hand in your letter, do not forget to tell the Postmaster to be sure and have it go. If you do not give this warning, he may keep it in the office.

Always remember to call the Postmaster and hand your letters to him and not put them in the letter-box. If you do the Postmaster will not have so much to do, and you will thereby encourage laziness. Remember that the Postmaster would consider it quite unkind to have your letters stamped by any one but himself. He will be pleased also to put wrappers on papers and back them for you occasionally, or oftener. Especially when he is busy distributing mail.

"NOT IF I KNOW IT."—The Portland (Me.) Argus says: A man sauntered into one of our apothecary shops the other morning, and after spending a few moments looking into the show-cases, and turning a piece of toothpick several times in his mouth, startled the clerk with the question: "What's good to cure poisoning?" "What kind of poisoning? asked the clerk. "Well, laudanum poisoning," says the stranger. "You see, the old woman took a couple of teaspoonfuls of laudanum, and I kinder thought I'd better drop into a pill-shop and see what's good for her." (All this in a drawling voice.) "Here, John," shouted the clerk, "put up a strong emetic as quick as you can, and you, sir, take it home, give it to your wife, follow it up with strong coffee, and call a doctor." "A doctor," says the man, taking his medicine. "She don't waste no money on doctors—not if I know it."

OFTEN when traveling among the Alps one sees a small black cross planted upon a rock, or on the brink of a torrent, or on the verge of the highway, to mark the spot where men have met with sudden death by accident. Solemn reminders, these, of our mortality! but they led our mind still further; for we said within us, if the places where men seal themselves for the second death could be thus manifestly indicated, what a scene would this world present! Here the memorial of a soul undone by yielding to a foul temptation, there a conscience seared by the rejection of a final warning, and yonder a heart forever turned into stone by resisting the last tender appeal to love. Our places of worship would scarce hold the sorrowful monuments which might be erected over spots where spirits were forever lost—spirits that date their rule from sinning against the gospel whiin under the sound of it.—Spurgeon.

STEEL BUTTONS.—A Milwaukee boy has swallowed half a dozen steel buttons, and his mother doesn't have to scream for him when he is out on the street playing with the Cluckerson boys. She just brings a magnet to the door, and he flies to it like a needle to the pole.

GEORGE WASHINGTON.

George Washington a hatchet had,
And chopped his father's tree—
A deed befitting no good lad,
But bad as bad could be.

When home at night his father came,
With daily toil worn out,
No rest he gave his weary frame,
But went and looked about.

And when he saw his tree was marred
(A cherry, tall and fair,
Its smooth young bark all foully scarred),
He wept, and tore his hair.

Then for his son he loudly called:
"George Washington, appear!"
And George, expecting to be mauled,
Said, "Father, I am here."

Then asked his sire, "Who did this wrong?
Who hacked my precious tree?"
And George, not hesitating long,
Said, "Father, it was me.

"I cut the tree you love so well;
That cruel deed was mine:
You know a lie I cannot tell;
My ways to truth incline."

The old man took a cowhide thin
His son and heir to welt;
Without a word he did begin—
His soul no mercy felt.

Then, when his fury was appeased,
But ere George ceased to turn,
The senior said, "My son, be pleased
This lesson now to learn:

"Much as a liar I despise,
I value more my trees;
So, if your skin you henceforth prize,
You must not hack at these.

"And now, my boy, just mind your eyes,
If son of mine you be;
I'd rather hear ten thousand lies
Than loose a single tree."

A LADY recently applied to a fire insurance company for a position as agent. When asked what her qualifications were, she touched her unblushing cheek.

A MAN in Princeton College believes in having "a place for everything, and everything in its place." He nails his slippers on the wall, four feet up, then all he has to do of an evening is to wheel up his easy-chair in front of them.

MUCH given to serenading his dulcinea with, "I'm lonely to-night, love, without thee," a lovelorn swain was interrupted by dogs the other evening, who effectually dispelled his loneliness during a two-mile race.

"JOHN," said a schoolmaster, "you will soon be a man, and will have to attend to business. What do you suppose you will do when you have to write letters unless you learn to spell better?" "Oh, sir," answered John, "I shall put easy words in them."

THE queerest object in nature is a Spanish beggar—for these beggars beg on horseback, and it is an odd thing to see a man riding up to a poor foot-passenger and asking alms. A gentleman in Valparaiso, being accosted by one of these mounted beggars, replied, "Why, sir, you come to beg of me, who have to go on foot, while you ride on horseback!" "Very true, sir," said the beggar, "and I have the more need to beg, as I have to support the horse as well as myself."

A FEW years ago a hungry crowd sat down at the well-spread supper-table of a sound-steamer, upon which one of the dishes contained a trout of moderate size. A serious-looking individual drew this dish toward him, saying, apologetically, "This is a fast-day with me." His next neighbor, an Irish gentleman, immediately inserted his knife into the fish, and transferred it to his own plate, remarking: "Sir, do you suppose nobody has a soul to be saved but yourself?"

A LEGISLATIVE correspondent writes from Albany: "The fact that Griffin, commonly called 'Old Honesty,' member from Delaware, has spoken only three times this session, is said to be evidence that the current jobs are few. 'Old Honesty,' pretending to be deaf as a lamp-post, secured a seat near the speaker's desk, out of which he cheated Mr. James Hayes. Hayes says, 'The sucker an't deaf very much. He can hear a ten-cent stamp fall on a pile of feathers forty feet away.'"

"Pause here, my friend, as you pass by;
As you now are, so once was I;
As I now am, so you must be;
Therefore prepare to follow me."

It is said that once an irreverent wag appended to this the following rejoinder:

"To follow you I'm not content,
Unless I know which way you went."

Some new obituary verses have been discovered by the Hamilton (Ont.) Spectator, as follows:

"No more his pa will candy bring,
Unto his darling boy;
He loud aloft with praises sing,
Expressive of his joy.

"With angels he will stay,
His rattle spring with pride,
And bless the day when far away,
He laid him down and died."

"Gone to meet his grandmother."

IT doesn't pay sometimes to be too good a mimic. Down in Texas, the other day, two men were out turkey-hunting, each on his own hook. Both were good at the "hobble-de-gobble" business, which is a necessary accompaniment to turkey-shooting, and so they heard each other's noise and both laid low for a good shot. Finally, one man pulled a trigger, and lo and behold, he perforated a worthy freedman instead of a turkey. The deceased was a first-rate gobbler, but a very poor fowl, and, for once, he talked turkey to poor purpose.

A CARD.

A Clergyman, while residing in South America, as missionary, discovered a safe and simple remedy for the cure of Nervous weakness, Early Decay, Disease of the Urinary and Seminal Organs, and the train of disorders brought on by baneful and vicious habits. Great numbers have been cured by this noble remedy. Prompted by a desire to benefit the afflicted and unfortunate, I will send the receipt for preparing and using this medicine, in a sealed envelope, to any one who needs it, Free of Charge. Address,

JOSEPH T. INMAN,

Station D, Bible House, New York City

MANHOOD:

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED!

Just published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the Radical cure (without medicine) of SPERMATORRHOEA or Seminal Weakness Involuntary Seminal Losses, IMPOTENCY, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, etc.; also, CONSUMPTION, EPILEPSY and FITS, induced by self indulgence or sexual extravagance; Piles, &c.

Price, in a sealed envelope, only six cents

The celebrated author in this admirable essay, clearly demonstrates from a thirty years successful practice, that the alarming consequences of self abuse may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife; pointing out a road of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

Sent under seal in a plain envelope, to any address post-paid, on the receipt of six cents, or two post stamps. Also, DR. SILSBEE'S REMEDY FOR PILES. Send for circular.

A Cautious Youth.

A widow laby in scotland hands only suly sun. on him she expended much to enable him to acquire an education, He was esbent from home for a long while. attenedd school, but having completed his cource of studies, he returned to his good old mother,

Come, John," said she, on the night of his arrival home and when they were about making prepration to retire, "you've been a long time awayfrom me my sun, and have studied much. I know you are a lad I have never heard ye pray. try it Johnh, for ye surely must know how with all the learning ye have got."

Accordingly John complied, made a long, humble, and, as he supposed, satislactory acknowledgment of his sirs and general unworthiness, and of his great indebtedness to his Maker.

"Well, mother," said John, "how did it suit ye?

"Pretty well, pretty well, John," replied the old lady; "but why didna ye gie the old de'il a slap or two.

"An?" said John, "not I, not I; for you know, mother, there's none of know whose hands we may sometimes fall into."

DON'T DO IT.—Don't imagine that 'every sound is a delight.' A sound whipping never delights the recipient.

Don't advocate cremation: One burning ought to satisfy any man

Don't ruin your neighbor's reputation to build up your own. A structure built of ruins will not stand.

Don't make your boy 'smoke' for a light offense. It is wrong to teach children bad habits.

Don't buy pools at a race track. Betting is immoral, especially when you bet on the wrong horse.

Don't suffer yourself to be moved to tears on account of the premature over flow of the lacteal fluid. It's worse then crying over spilt milk.

Don't learn to "keep books." The man who forgets to return a borrowed book is worse than an infidel.

Don't respect a man for his title ael. General tailors are sometimes excellent judges of whisky.

Don't imagine that phlebotomy had its day. Doesn't our currency bear evidence of depletion?

Don't dream that you can work incessantly. The most vigorous marksman needs a rest.

Don't advocate the doctrine of Christian perfection, give a man a chance to criticise hise wife's milliniery bill. Don't forget to pay the printer. No no man can make a good impression with out money.—Logansport Pharos

Womans' Rights.

The following are the opening sentences of an address on this subject by Mrs. Skinne:

Miss president, feller wimmen and male trash generally: I am here to-day for the purpose of discussing wo-man's rights, re-cussing her wrongs and cussing the men,

I beleave both sexes were created perfectly equal, with the womans a little more equal than the men,

I also beleive that the that the world would be hapeier to-day if man had never existed,

As a success, man is a failure, and I thank my stars that my mother was a woman.

I not only maintain these principles but maintain a shiftless husband besides.

They say man was created first.

Well, s'pose he was. Ain't first experiments always failures.

If I was a betting man, I would bet $250 dollars they are.

The only decent thing about him was a rib, and that went to make something better. [Applause].

And then they threw into our face about taking an apple. I'll bet $5 that Adam boosted her up the tree and only gave her the core.

And what did he do when he was found out? True to his masculine instincts, he sneaked behind Eve's Grecian bend, and said: 'Twasn't me. 'twas her;' and woman has had to father everything mean, and mother it too.

What we want is the ballot, and the ballot we're bound to have, if we have to let down back hair and swim in a sea of sanguinary gore.—Sensation

Another fatal result from eating raw ham has occurred at Saugatuck, Mich. A Mr. and Mrs. McDowell, after dartaking of ham in this condition, were attacked by trachina spiralis, and died. There should be a statute for this heathenish practice or it should be classed among the acts of confirmed idiocy.

It is better to carve your name on hearts than marble.

Anecdote of a Dog.

My eldest son, says a writer in the Sunday-school Herald, was walking over the fields in the country, a long way from any dwelling, when he was pursued by a fierce dog belonging to the gentleman whose land he was crossing. The lad was alarmed and ran for his life. He struck into a wood, but the dog gained fast upon him, when he looked round to see how near the dog was, and stumbling over a stone he fell and broke his leg. Unable to move, the boy saw the dog coming down upon him, and expected to be seized and torn; when to his surprise, the dog came near, seemed to notice the boy was hurt, instantly wheeled about, and went off for that help which he could not give himself.

The dog went off to the nearest house and barke for help. Unable to arrest attention, he made another visit of sympathy to the boy, and then ran to the house, there showing such signs of anxiety that the family followed him to the place where the lad lay.

This dog was pursuing the boy as an enemy; but the moment he saw his enemy prostrate and in distress, his rage was turned to pity, and he flew to his relif.

The "intelligent compositor" has a hard life of it. He is made responsible for all the errors which creep into the newspapers. The blunders of the editor, the correspondent and the proof reader, are all thrown upon his impersonal shoulders. There is now one intelligent compositor less in this sinful world. It came about in this way: He loved madly, passionately. His fair one smiled upon him and all was going well. His suit was safe, but in an evil moment he conceived the dangerous idea of clinching it, so to speak, with a poem. He wrote the poem in a moment of heavenly inspiration, and sent it to the village weekly. It began thus:

Mary, Mary Jane Pilkleton Flier
[illegible]
The wild world can never beguile her,
My good headed [illegible]

It was a pretty poetic flower as it stood, but the compositorial Goth laid his typographical hand upon it, and when it appeared 'skirted' was spelled with an "h," "belted" had two "l's" in it, and an "i." And so they laid him tearfully away beneath the daisies and rendered a verdict as above.

A Bohemian of Old.

The business of running after news is not of recent creation. It is as ancient as the invention of journalism; the old Bohemian was a Frenchman called Renaudot. the most eminent runner after who was namou Mathieu Donzelot, otherwise called the "Pavement Sinker." In the morning, before leaving his room the wide awake Donzelot consulted the skies, and a barometer which adorned his mansard; then he took his cane and writing case saying: Rain! Some will slip to dayunder carriage wheels, and be crushed to death." or else: "Stormy weather! we shall have to records some cases of mental alienation or of hydrophobia," or finally: "Gloomy! Cloudy! Fine weather for spleen. Let us make war on suicides!"

There was a riot one day on Pantheon place. Donzelot sat down amid a hail of stones, pen in hand, to note the events one of his friends, happening to be present, said: What are you doing here sir? Run! fly!

Donvelot, without lookingat him drew his watch, and contined to write down minute for minute the phrases and evolutions of the riot. Are you not going to run?" cried anew his friend

"God forbid; oblige me by handling this to journal; you will tell him that I remain on this spot to read the continuation."

A nhour after, the disorder was at its height: the authorities and insurgents had come to blows, and our Bohemain was struck by a ball. A surgeon hasteued to him.

"You are wounded!" said he

Yes," replied Donzelot, "and severely, too, for I can not write."

"Write," abruptly said the surgeon: "think of your wound!"

"Don't be in a hurry;" replied Donzelot. "Each one to his business, mine is te relate events. You will replace me. Here wite at the bottom of this postscript:"

"Twenty minuts past 3 [illegible] in consequence of the discharge of musketry by the troops three men were wounded and one killed.

"Who is the dead man?" asked the surgeon.

Myself," replied Donzelot, and he expired.

A New Albany servant girl came near being burned to death, last Friday, by the explosion of a coal oil can with which she was assisting a sluggish fire

A Fight With the Tiger.

One day last week a professional gambler went into a faro room on Clark street to have an engagement with the "tiger." He commenced playing, lost, won, lost again, continued losing, and at the end of fifty hours he quit the engagement out of pocket to the amount of $11,900. During this season of fifty hours the game was unbroken, The gambler never slept for a moment never stopped to eat a meal, but carried the whole tremendous enterprise through without rest, cessation, or refreshment. The wonderful thing of this is not the amount lost by the player, although it was a sufficiently bad thing for him, nor the amount won by the bank, but the enormous endurance shown by the loser. The case is one nearly or quite without a parallel.—Men have ridden, spoken, and done many other things for twenty-four or thirty hours at a stretch, but a case other than the present one is unknown in which a labor was carried through so long a period, a labor which involves so tremendous a mental wear and tear, and was, therefore, trebly arduous in its effects upon the system of the chief participant. The event is also noticeable as showing the absorbing power of gaming. One cannot fancy any task which would induce or force a man to deprive himself during the same period of sleep or refreshment. One watching by the bedside of a dying child would succumb within less than this period. A man who had the certainty of living but fifty hours would probably spend one fourth of it in sleep, and would give due attention to his food. One escaping from a deadly foe, and knowing that every instant's delay might prove fatal would not fly for so long a time without snatching now and then a momentary rest. In short one can conceive of no other cicumstances in which a man could gve fifty unbroken hours to a single task—circumstances more especially which should fear the chief actor with hope and fear and harass him incessantly with the operation of the most destructive of the emotions. Could some one perform a similar feat in the interest of charity, or country, or friendship, he would secure for himself a very fair grade of immortality.
